can resurrect old school fun...
(as well as anxiety)

By Hannah Ball

hball@tctimes.com; 810-433-6792

Have you ever wondered what your old high school buddies have been doing since graduation? With social media, it's easier to connect with people when they live farther away, but seeing someone face to face again is completely different.

Some local people keep the appeal of high school reunions alive.

At Clover Beach in Linden, any Linden graduate or staff can pay $2 and bring a food dish to attend the Linden High School Any Class Reunion once a year. This year it was held on July 18.

This high school reunion has grown since its inception six years ago, when about 15 people attended. Around 300-350 graduates from 1940-2000 attended this year, some bringing family, said LHS Any Class Reunion organizer Wanda Coleman, a 1977 graduate.

"In Linden, no one ever just hung out with their own class," she said. "Even if you weren't friends with everyone, you knew who everyone was."

Instead of getting dressed up, she said, the dress code is casual.

"You wear whatever you'd wear to the beach. There's no stress involved," she said. "I think ours is a little more laid back and hopefully people don't worry as much."

This past year, the reunion cost about $225, including the cost of the pavilion, cups, plates, silverware, charcoal and fliers. A photo booth was available, and people took pictures with fun props and frames.

Last year, they crowned two people the king and queen of the reunion. It was too windy for crowns this year.

Coleman said the appeal of a high school reunion is reconnecting with people you haven't seen in a long time, or "meeting up with someone you went to school with but never really knew...and maybe making a new friend."

People often stress over high school reunions, coming face-to-face with their old rivals and wondering if their life can stand up to others.

People also worry about seeing high school bullies and wondering if they ever grew up.

"We have one girl who was at the reunion this year and she said, 'Oh my God, there's the girl that used to pick on me all of time. I hope she's grown up.' It kind of makes people revert back to what they were like in high school," she said. "Old things come rushing back and you get that little anxiety attack because you're like, 'I hope so and so doesn't show up because I don't want her to treat me that way.'"

Coleman said about 10 people in the past six years have told her they don't want to attend.

"They say, 'I've kept in contact with people who are important to me and I don't have any desire to see anyone else,'" she said.

Graduates aren't the only ones who can attend. Linden staff are also invited, and past coaches, bus drivers, and teachers usually attend.

"That's the novelty of what we do. It's not just one class," she said.

Planning a high school reunion for one class is a bit different.

Ann Gibson plans the Linden High School graduating class of 1975 reunion. This year the 40th reunion was July 18 at John's Pizzeria in Fenton. Gibson said it was a lot of fun, but a lot of work.

"I looked up every single person on the Internet," she said. She uses the white pages to find people, as well as an online search. Thirty-four people attended.

"We just got together and ate and talked. We had a memorial for those who had passed," Gibson said.

Even though it was smaller than the LHS Any Class Reunion, money was still a factor. Gibson said she charged $15 to get in to help pay for the food, $50 deposit for the banquet hall, and $67 in postage.

Figuring out how many people were going to attend was the hardest part.

DECLINING ATTENDANCE FOR FENTON ALUMNI ASSOCIATION BANQUET

This might be the last Fenton Alumni Association Banquet.

"There is a possibility that this will be the last one," said Orpha Verhelle, treasurer of the Fenton Alumni Association Steering Committee. "We're not getting any participation and we're not getting any new members."

They used to have over 250 people attend the event, but lately it's been less than 100. Verhelle, 74, graduated in 1959 and has been in the association for around 15 to 20 years.

The committee will see how this year's goes to determine future plans.

"We need younger people in the association to bring in new ideas, but we're not getting them," she said. "We're all getting older. We're in our 70s, 80s and 90s and we just can't do it much longer physically and we're not going to be around."

Tickets are still available for the banquet on Aug. 8th.

"The hardest part for me was sending out a lot of invitations and not getting a response. Maybe 10 told me they weren't coming, out of 130 people," she said.

Not liking their appearance, distance and other personal reasons were given for declining to attend.

For Gibson, the appeal of a high school reunion is being together with old friends.

"It felt like yesterday. I didn't think people changed," she said.

Disasters in the air, such as the doomed Malaysia Air Flight 370 crash in March 2014, and most recently the Germanwings Airbus A320 crash on March 24 in the French Alps, may have...

THE BUZZ ON BEEES

Sources: cnn.com, mentalfloss.com, backyardbeekeeper.com

THEIR STING HAS SOME BENEFITS

1 A toxin in bee venom called melittin may prevent HIV. Melittin can kill HIV by poking holes into the virus's protective envelope. (Meanwhile, when melittin hitches a ride on certain nanoparticles, it will just bounce off normal cells and leave them unharmed.) Scientists at Washington University in St. Louis hope the toxin can be used in preventative gels. Bee stings may also ease pain caused by rheumatoid arthritis. Researchers at the University of Sao Paulo found that molecules in bee venom increase your body's level of glucocorticoid, an anti-inflammatory hormone.

THEY WORK HARDER THAN YOU

2 During chillier seasons, worker bees can live for nine months. But in the summer, they rarely last longer than six weeks—they literally work themselves to death.

THEY CAN RECOGNIZE HUMAN FACES

Honeybees make out faces the same way we do. They take parts—like eyebrows, lips, and ears—and cobble them together to make out the whole face. It's called "configural processing," and it might help computer scientists improve face recognition technology, the New York Times reports.

THEY'RE JOB CREATORS

4 Americans consume about 285 million pounds of honey each year. On top of that, the U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates that honeybees pollinate 80 percent of the country's insect crops—meaning bees pollinate over $20 billion worth of crops each year.

THEIR BRAINS DEFY TIME

5 When aging bees do jobs usually reserved for younger members, their brain stops aging. In fact, their brains ages in reverse. (Imagine if riding a tricycle didn't just make you feel young—it actually made your brain tick like a younger person's.) Scientists at Arizona State University believe this discovery can help us slow the onset of dementia.

THEY CAN SOLVE HAIRY MATHEMATICAL PROBLEMS

6 Pretend it's the weekend, and it's time to do errands. You have to visit six stores and they're all at six separate locations. What's the shortest distance you can travel while visiting all six? Mathematicians call this "traveling salesman problem," and it can even stump some computers. But for bumblebees, it's a snap. Researchers at Royal Holloway University in London found that bumblebees fly the shortest route possible between flowers. So far, they're the only animals known to solve the problem.

BUMBLE BEE

Small colonies, large.

WORKER BEE

Female, Non-reproductive, small.

WASPS

SAVE THE BEEES

Since the 1940s, honeybee colonies have decreased from 5 million to 2.5 million. Researchers say there could be many reasons for the decline: everything from parasites and bacteria to environmental stress, like a lack of pollen. Here are ways we can help save the bees.

REDUCE

Limit use of pesticides while plants are in bloom and bees are out foraging. Be careful when using pesticides it can drift and is poisonous to bees.

BUY LOCAL

Go to your local farmers market and be on the look out for local fruits, vegetables and honey. This helps support your local bee population.

PLANT

Plants help bees to survive. So whether it's a garden, a small planter or community green space, there is something you can grow to help the bees.

Home values at highest level since '07

■ Home values up 10 percent this year in Fenton, Lake Fenton and Linden school districts

By Sally Rummel

news@tctimes.com; 810-629-8282

One home for sale in Livingston County recently opened its doors for 19 showings in one day, resulting in six offers that same day.

"We just closed on that one," said Dave Gillett, loan officer for Star Mortgage in Fenton. "This is a much busier year than last year."

SUMMARY

■ Homes for sale in the Fenton, Lake Fenton and Linden school districts are in a high demand area, with sales prices up 10 percent over last year.

Home values have been rising so much this year, especially in high demand areas like the Fenton area and Linden that it has become a stressful time for buyers. "I just had a loan approved for two young school teachers," said Gillett. "He bought the three-bedroom house 2½ years ago for $54,500 and just sold it for $95,000."

Gillett explained that the market was "a bonanza" two years ago, when people could afford so much more because prices were so low. "Now it's difficult for people to afford a house, with interest rates up about .75 percent since 2013 and home values up, too."

Patrik Welty of Legacy Realty in Fenton said that the market hasn't exceeded its historic high, regarding average sale price and average price per square foot, "although we are approaching it," said Welty. "Is it a 'bubble?' We're not at that point. The recession caused such a dip in home prices that were irrationally low and a good portion of our recovery has been a realignment of these prices."

He sees that today's real estate market indicates strength and a demand for housing in this area. "The average sale price is up 10 percent over last year," said Welty. "The last six months, homes in the Fenton, Lake Fenton and Linden school districts had an average sale price of $197,000, compared to a six-month period one year ago when it was $177,000."

But he doesn't anticipate values continuing to rise at this rate. "Right now, it's the tight supply and strength of the demand that are raising the prices."

As a mortgage lender, Gillett tries to encourage clients to look a little further out in their search for the perfect home. "I try to find out where people work and how far they're willing to travel," he said. "The further north you go, the more affordable the housing prices will be. Different areas are hotter markets than others, and the closer you get to Livingston County, the higher the prices."

How do buyers and sellers handle the strength of today's market when trying to leverage their own transaction?

"Buyers should be prepared financially to be in a position to move on a property right away," said Welty. "There will likely be multiple bids and you're more likely to have a chance to get the property if you are pre-approved and prepared to 'pull the trigger' when the timing is right."

For sellers, Welty says it's a matter of being priced appropriately. "We still have to get the appraisal and that is an area that still has its challenges," he said. "Because of this rapid recovery, there are uneven prices, so it can be difficult to find comparable sales that are relevant and support the sales price."

This is when the seller and agent have to be confident that they can support the selling price to both the buyer and the appraiser. "Today's buyers have more knowledge and data at their fingertips than ever before," said Welty.

“Right now, it's the tight supply and strength of the demand that are raising the prices.”

Moving to a new city or state?

■ Here's what you need to know beforehand to pick the right school for your family

By Sally Rummel

news@tctimes.com; 810-629-8282

JonPaul and Holly Farmer were looking for schools for their son, Landon, who is going into first grade. They chose a private school over public, appreciating the smaller class size at Holy Family Catholic School in Grand Blanc.

“Our biggest reason for choosing a school was classroom size.”

Holly Farmer
Parent of an incoming first-grader

Moving into a new area is already stressful, but trying to find the best school district for your children adds another important dimension to this new chapter in your life.

GreatSchools.org is a non-profit organization that helps parents find, compare and get involved in local schools. Founder and CEO Bill Jackson offers these suggestions to parents:

Assess your child's needs.

Think about their strengths and weaknesses and look for a school that fits and will make them college-ready at high school graduation, even if that's not their plan. The school should prepare them for that option. “We wanted to make sure that Landon would get the support he may need and the teacher was not overwhelmed,” said Holly Farmer.

Define your ideal school.

Consider what's most important to you, whether it's math, foreign languages, art, religion or special education resources. Educate yourself on different teaching methods and consider how your child learns best. What his or her siblings and friends do may or may not be the best fit.

Consider all the possibilities.

Search all the options nearby, including public, private, magnet and charter schools. Find out about homeschooling organizations, online education and partnerships with local colleges. Learn about “schools of choice” options in the district you're moving to. You can start research online at GreatSchools.org, contact the local school district's main office and visit any school events.

Check the numbers.

Check the numbers, but don't let them dictate your decision. While student enrollment, student-teacher ratio and test scores are important indicators, they don't always tell the whole story. See if test scores are improving and how they've changed over time. Use tools like GreatSchools.org, the National Center for Education Statistics or state departments of education to find out some of this information.

Visit before you decide.

If a school isn't friendly about a pre-enrollment visit, that may be your first red flag about how they'll respond to you as a parent. While you're at the school, meet the principal, teachers, and other parents. Check the students' work posted on walls. See how kids and adults interact and find out what type of involvement the school wants from parents. Experts suggest you visit at least two schools, just for comparison's sake.

Ask the right questions.

Ask the right questions, such as:

- What are the school's expectations for students and do they match your expectations for your child?
- How are teachers supported, trained and tracked?
- How much homework is expected?
- How does the school handle behavior issues?

Don't assume.

Don't make assumptions based on the school's reputation from 20 years ago, or hear only what you want to hear about the school, based on its convenience for you. Use today's accurate tools and information to make the best decision.

Find out how to enroll and when.

Make sure you have all the necessary documentation, including medical records and vaccinations.

Have a backup plan.

If there's not a spot open for your child, get on a wait list, if possible, and be ready to sign up for the Plan B school. It might end up being your #1 favorite.

Moving with Fido?

■ Here are 11 tips to make the move easier on your four-legged family members

By Sally Rummel

news@tctimes.com; 810-629-8282

Moving to a new home is not only stressful for parents and kids, it's also a major life change for pets.

Here are a few tips for easing the transition and keeping pets safe during the move.

1

Pack and label your pet's familiar and necessary items, so the box can be immediately unpacked and ready to use at your new location. Include food, water, medications, bed, litter box, toys, etc.

2

Ask for veterinary records from your former veterinary's office so that your new vet has current information about your pet's medical history.

3

Keep a week's worth of food and medications on hand with you in case of an emergency. You may want to ask for an extra prescription refill before you move.

4

Keep your pet away from the chaos of moving day, and use a new travel crate that you have already introduced to him several days before the move.

5

Prepare a first-aid kit in case of an emergency en route to your new home. Include your vet's phone number, gauze for wounds, adhesive tape for bandages, towels and hydrogen peroxide.

6

Play it safe in the car by traveling with a crate. For cats, use a well-ventilated carrier, secured with a seat belt, and surround your pet with familiar toys. Don't ever keep your pet in the open bed of a truck or storage area of a moving van.

7

Don't leave your pet alone in a parked vehicle. If you'll be staying overnight in a hotel, search ahead for pet-friendly accommodations and do your best to keep him on a regular eating and sleeping schedule.

8

If your move involves air travel, make sure to check

METRO CREATIVE GRAPHICS

Making a move can be stressful for pets as well as humans. There are many ways you can help make a smooth transition to a new home.

with the airline about any pet requirements or restrictions. Give yourself plenty of time to work out any necessary arrangements. Consult your vet about ways to lessen the stress of travel.

9

Find a new veterinary clinic and emergency hospital by asking your current vet to recommend a doctor in your new community. Schedule an appointment to meet the vet and ask yourself the following questions: are the receptionists, doctors, technicians and assistants friendly, knowledgeable and professional? Are office hours and location convenient? Does the clinic offer emergency, specialty services or boarding?

Prep your new home for pets. As soon as you get to your new home, set out all your pet's necessities. Kim Rinks of Coldwell Banker Professionals in Fenton suggests that you bring items from home that "smell" familiar, from bedding to blankets, to ease the transition.

11

Learn more about your new area. Once you find a new vet, ask about any local health concern or any vaccinations or medications your pet might need. Be aware of new laws that affect pet ownership, including restrictive breed laws, leash laws, etc.

Arden

PLAN 30-329

The Arden is designed for use as a vacation home, but there's nothing to stop a person from living in it year round. In fact, the kitchen, utility room and great room/nook are every bit as spacious and well appointed as those found in many primary residences. And the plan also has three bathrooms -- at least one more than is typical in a home this size.

Cancer diagnosis goes ignored by family member

DEAR AMY:

My sister (in her early 40s) was diagnosed with cancer. They caught it early, so it's still at an early stage. We in the family all found out about this a few weeks ago. I have messaged her and her husband a few times since then to chitchat, but never asked them about the cancer. I feel like if they want to talk about it or need my help, I will be there. It is understood by everyone in my family that we will help each other if asked. My sister and I haven't spoken for a week, and I found out from my other sister that my brother-in-law called me rude and not supportive because I didn't offer to help. I have two young children, and the younger one was constantly sick. I also work full time and am dealing with a dying father-in-law. I don't have the memory capacity or time to follow up on them all the time. Was I being rude? — Hurt illness to be a private matter — your sister has cancer. It is incomprehensible that you would learn of this, initiate contact with your sister to “chitchat,” and then never mention it. Your sister and her husband also did not bring it up, but they knew you had an awareness of their situation and were no doubt expecting you to at least inquire. You say you can't be supportive because your sister's cancer is trumped by other family issues. This is even more baffling, because if you have experience dealing with illness, surely you realize that the comfort doesn't come from offers of “help,” but from having people at least acknowledge the challenging situation illness presents. In the course of your messaging, what does it cost you to type: “Oh, Sis, I heard about your cancer. Thank goodness it was caught early. I'm thinking of you...”? All of your reasons for not doing this come off as justifications after the fact. You should apologize and offer some sisterly support.

ASK

BY AMY DICKINSON

DEAR HURT:

You were being rude, and you ARE being rude. Even if yours is a family that considers

What Is COPD?

DEAR DR. ROACH:

Please help me to understand what COPD means. — S.

ANSWER:

“COPD” stands for “chronic obstructive pulmonary disease.” “Chronic” means that it is long-lasting, and “obstructive” means the airflow in and out of the lungs is decreased. The three subtypes of COPD are chronic bronchitis, emphysema and chronic obstructive asthma. These conditions usually are progressive. COPD is the third leading cause of death in the U.S. Chronic bronchitis is a chronic productive cough (specifically, lasting three months or more in two successive years). Smoking is far and away the leading cause of chronic bronchitis in the developed world, but home cooking fires are the cause in developing nations. “Emphysema” means the destruction of the walls of the airways, causing abnormal, permanently enlarged air spaces. Smoking is again the leading cause of emphysema, but a genetic condition, alpha 1 antitrypsin deficiency, can bring about both emphysema and liver disease. People with this uncommon disorder sometimes mistakenly are assumed to be smokers. Asthma is a common condition that is highly variable from person to person. Most people have reversible obstruction to the airway with exacerbations of asthma, but some people have a degree of obstruction all the time, and they are considered to have COPD. COPD typically causes cough and shortness of breath, especially with activity. COPD often has exacerbations, which may be associated with infections, that cause worsening of symptoms, frequently requiring treatment, including hospitalization. Treatment for COPD is to remove any known cause (usually smoking, even secondhand smoke). Medicines to reduce inflammation (especially inhaled steroids) often are used, as are medicines to relax the muscles inside airways to relieve obstruction. In severe cases, oxygen is necessary. Lung surgery or transplantation is rarely used.
