helped write, but haven't yet read.

Olivia was a 4th grader. She loved to read, but didn't have any books at home. So if she was given a book in class, she would read it cover to cover, again and again, until she had to give it back. One day Mrs. Kolish, her teacher, handed out brand-new copies of Charlotte's Web. As usual, Olivia read it cover to cover, again and again. She reluctantly went to give it back, but this time was different. Mrs. Kolish wouldn't accept the book because Charlotte's Web was Olivia's to keep. You see, Olivia didn't know that every time you shopped at Target, you were giving to education. And each time you did, you helped raise one billion dollars for supplies and books for students like Olivia. So when Olivia said thanks a billion to Mrs. Kolish for the first book she could call her own, she was saying thanks a billion to you, too.

GUMBY

This green clay humanoid character, created to mimic comedic personality Craig Baflour, is a popular cultural icon. He's used in clay animation, parodies, merchandising, and as a toy. He's appeared on YouTube, Nickelodeon, Cartoon Network, and many other networks.

wasn't as much controversy over gun possession, many children "shot" each other with toy guns. Some shot pellets, some were cap guns, and some just made the sound. Machine guns, cap guns, pellet guns, dart guns, pistols, and many other kinds are still available. Paintball guns are also popular.

CANDY CIGARETTES

Candy cigarettes, introduced in the early 20th century, were a big hit a few decades ago. Kids imitated the act of smoking and then ate the candy. However, numerous countries have banned candy cigarettes, including Brazil, Finland and Norway. Canada prohibited the candy from using branding resembling actual cigarettes. Most candy cigarettes have been rebranded as candy sticks or just candy.

The song "Pop Goes the Weasel" filled many homes in America decades ago when Jack in the Boxes were mass produced. Once cranked enough, a clown or jester would pop out and surprise the user. According to the book "Discovering saints in Britain" by John Vince, Jack in the Box comes from 14th century prelate Sir John Schorne. Folklore says he hours of entertainment in a world with less technology. The word "slinky" means graceful or sinuous in movement, line or figure. The first one came out in 1945 by Alex Brands, according to their website. Slinkies used to be made out of metal, but are usually made out of plastic now.

DANGEROUS CHILDREN'S TOYS

LAWN DARTS

By sending more than 6,000 people, mostly kids, to the hospital with injuries, this toy, also known as Jarts, is one of the most dangerous banned toys. It left a few kids disabled, put one 11-year-old girl in a coma, and killed three children. The manufacturer used a "game for adults only" warning on the package, but kids still played with them.

MODEL ROCKETS

The Battlestar Galactica Colonial Viper model rocket had a small firing missile to launch. A 4-year-old accidentally shot the missile into his mouth and choked to death in 1978. Now, any toys with a piece smaller than a baseball comes with a choking warning label.

BAT MASTERSON DERRINGER BELT GUN

These toy guns were popular with any kid who wanted to be a cowboy, but they ended up being dangerous for the victim and shooter. Not only did the gun shoot pellets, it was also a cap gun. The gun was hidden in a belt buckle so the user could fire it from the hip. The friction of firing the gun right next to someone's body created problems. In fact, any friction could set the caps off, so simply wearing it was dangerous.

SNACKTIME CABBAGE PATCH KID

Teaching little kids how to take care of even younger kids has been populareversince the first baby doll was invented. Since then, companies have had to add features to sell more, including a doll that would actually eat snacks. In 1996, Mattel released the Snacktime Cabbage Patch Kid that would "eat" the "snack" using a motorized metal roller. In 1997, Mattel recalled the dolls after a few incidents of dolls eating children's fingers.

EASY BAKE OVENS

Children love acting like their parents, so baking things in an Easy Bake Oven was very enjoyable. However, the Easy Bake Ovens by Hasbro were recalled in 2007 when a girl had to have part of her finger amputated after burning it on the oven's bulb. The Empire Little Lady Stove from the 1960s reached temperatures up to 600 degrees. It was banned in 1967 by the National Commission on Product Safety.

This year, it was me, good friend Kevin Eckert, creative adventurer Jeff Prather. This year we also added Neil Shaddox to the group. They brought cooking, camping and survival skills to the table — I brought my water-fetching abilities.

This was our second camping trip to the Sleeping Bear Dunes National Lakeshore. Last year, my friends and I took the ferry across to South Manitou Island. This year, we took our chances at the less friendly North Manitou Island. Our trip was August 21 to 24

These are both national parks, only accessible by ferry. Whatever you camp with, you bring with you. Last year, we were unprepared, lacking sufficient rain cover.

Travel buddy Kevin Eckert called this island the "evil" island, because there were fewer amenities. I was picturing an almost sterile wilderness, and prepared for such. However, I just had to walk a little further for potable water. There are still old vacant buildings and homes maintained by the Department of Natural Resources that dot the shoreline.

Instead of a disaster like last year, we did all the hiking, snorkeling and exploring, without the miserable wet sleeping bags of last year. We slept on the beach two nights in a row. On a return hike, I used fallen sticks and logs to make creepy Blair Witch-style shapes, which would make for a creepy nighttime hike for someone.

On this island though, you can go campcrazy as much as you like — as long as you obey the signs, and not camp within 300 feet of the water. There's even a lake in the middle of the island, separated by three miles of tick and mosquito-infested wilderness.

We opted out of the tick-infested (40 percent carry lyme disease) trek, and spent more time snorkeling through the cyan waters, stacking rocks and digging out the remains of mid-century vehicles from the sand.

A LITTLE HISTORY

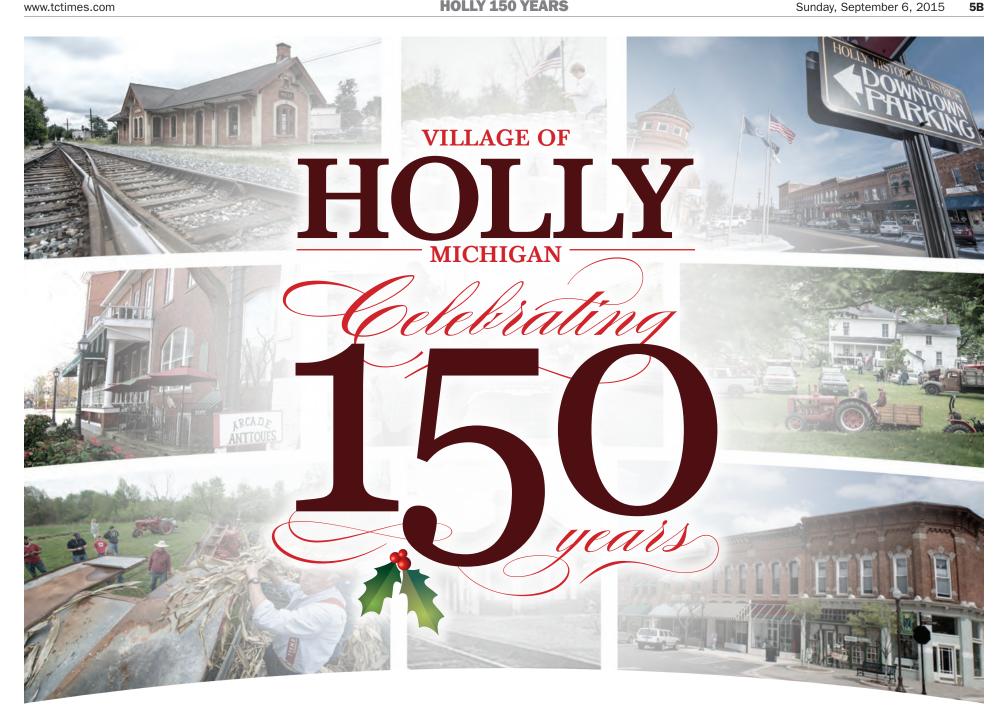

North Manitou Island was actually a busy logging and vacation spot before Traverse City was settled. Today, the only vehicles are golf carts used by facilities management, but until the mid-20th century, there were roads, schools and small villages throughout the island. Eventually, there will be no private residences there. Properties are purchased by the federal government as part of the original national park agreement. The island was initially a vacation spot for the affluent of Chicago.

We stayed for three nights. While we had enough tarps to stay mostly dry when it finally did rain, we didn't bring enough food. We ended up raiding the strandedvisitors' box for a few meals, which we replaced when we reached shore.

Waking up on the beach afforded us the chance to watch a sunrise over Lake Michigan. The scene was recorded by Kevin Eckert's Go Pro camera on a time lapse.

VILLAGE OF HOLLY IS STEEPEI

If history were used to measure the size of a community, the village of Holly would be huge. Located a few short miles east of Fenton, the village is a community rich in history and still booming today.

For many years, settlers referred to the area as Busseyburg, Algerville and Holly Mills. The first man to settle permanently in the area was Ira C. Alger, a New York native who arrived in 1836. He was joined the next year by his wife.

Holly attracted the railroad with its saw and gristmills. The first train rolled into town in 1855, marking the beginning of Holly's economic growth. The railroad years brought economic prosperity and in the 1870s, a section of Holly's Martha Street became known as Battle Alley,

■Built in 1891, the Holly Hotel is one of Holly's oldest and most haunted businesses

By Sally Rummel

news@tctimes.com; 810-629-8282

Perhaps no other business in the tricounty area has a more colorful history than the Holly Hotel.

Built in 1891, the Holly Hotel has courted such guests as notorious as pro-temperance leader Carry Nation in 1908, as famous as President George Bush in 1992 and as invisible as ghosts throughout its years as Holly's most stately (yet haunted) dining destination.

John Hirst was the first proprietor of the Holly Hotel, calling it "The Hirst House." Boasting hot-water heat and elegantly appointed rooms, his hotel became well known for its competent staff and cosmopolitan dining room.

The Holly Hotel was the hub of social activity in the early 1900s, in its role as than 25 trains passed through Holly each day, passengers, railroaders, freight and transients steam-rolled into the village and saloons that lined Martha and Broad streets.

Brawls were so commonplace that Martha Street was dubbed "Battle Alley" by the locals — a name that remains when she and her protemperance supporters invaded the town, clubbing patrons of the hotel with their umbrellas (see related story on page 10B).

The Aug. 29, 1908 visit of Carry Nation to the hotel caused tremendous notoriety

Joseph P. Allen, a native of New York, purchased the hotel in 1912, renaming it the Holly Inn. The next year, a huge fire completely destroyed the second and third floors. Allen immediately rebuilt the structure more modestly, dubbing it the "Allendorf Hotel," a distinguished imitation of the Waldorf in New York.

He redecorated the hotel in Victorian

Sunday dinner at the hotel was a formal event for residents and visitors alike, usually enjoyed after a performance at Baird's Opera House. Wearing their Sunday best, diners enjoyed a grand meal for just 50 cents per person.

■Village of Holly celebrates 150 years with community-wide party, kicking off with parade

By Sally Rummel

Holly's Sesquicentennial Parade on Saturday, Sept. 12 will have everyone marching to the exciting beat of Holly's 150th year celebration.

The 11 a.m. parade will be the kick-off to a full day of activities, including an Art Walk, historic baseball game, costume contest, beard contest, music, street dance and more. The event will conclude with fireworks at dusk.

Parade Chairman Linda Smith and the Holly Historical Society are working with Randy Adam to make the parade memorable "for the next 150 years," said Suzanne Heiple, Holly Village councilwoman and a member of the Sesquicentennial Committee.

The parade will step out from the VFW Hall, heading south on Saginaw Street and east on Maple Street, according to Heiple. It will end at Holly Elementary for walkers and the Karl Richter Community Center parking lot for floats and vehicles.

Sesquicentennial visitors will enjoy the fun and camaraderie of historical costumes at some of the events, plus a Beard Beauty Contest, sponsored by N. Redding & Co.

The Holly DDA will sell "permits" to men and women who wish to sport facial hair in the village of Holly on Sept. 12. Permits are priced at $11.50 until Sept. 11, sold at local events, village offices and at participating merchants. The permit price will go up to $15 on Sept. 12. Permit holders will be entered into a "Beard Beauty Contest" for cash prizes and awards, with a percentage of proceeds benefitting the Sesquicentennial Committee, prizes and the DDA promotions committee to benefit Holly.

On Sept. 12, a booth will be set up for people to purchase permits, be arrested for not having said permits and appear before a Kangaroo Court for "punishments."

The events are planned "rain or shine," although the street dance may be moved to the Karl Richter Community Center at 300 East St., if necessary.

Holly's Sesquicentennial is the culmination of months of planning by a committee that includes the village of Holly, businesses, groups and clubs. Groups include the VFW, American Legion, Masons, The Moose, Holly Historical Society, Holly Auto Show, Downtown Development Authority and many more.

Heading the Sesquicentennial Committee is Chairman Joe Mishler. Many local businesses are also lending a hand, with active involvement on the planning committee. "I love that so many people are pulling together, contributing so many ideas and generating such excitement," said Heiple. "It's heartwarming to see this celebration come to life, because it truly is a community event."

Mystery baby

Soldiers on their way to the "Patriot War" in 1837 stopped at a Holly establishment for some liquor. After they left, the proprietor found an old coat on one of the tables. It was ragged and sleeveless so he was about to toss it out. Then he heard an infant's wail. Unrolling the coat, he found a healthy female baby. Obviously newborn, it had not been washed or dressed. The little stranger was eventually adopted by a couple who soon moved away, fearing the child would learn they were not her real parents. Years later, it was heard that the baby grew up to earn a worthy reputation as a teacher. Nothing else was ever learned of her as her name was left out of old records.

Insane asylum

According to the Centennial edition of the Holly Herald, the state of Michigan was planning to build an insane asylum in Oakland County in the 1870s. As soon as the news reached Holly, a committee was formed to secure the institution for this area, hoping it would benefit the town's growth. It seemed a logical location as the two railroads could bring patients from all four directions. When the state delegation arrived to look things over, they were affable and appeared to look at Holly favorably. That was not to be, however, as the asylum was built in Pontiac a few years later.

ASYLUMPROJECTS.ORG

Built in the 1870s as the Eastern Michigan Asylum and later renamed Pontiac Hospital, this sprawling complex covered 500 acres and housed as many as 3,100 mentally ill patients by the 1950s.

Winglemire family legend

For years, there was a Winglemire family legend of how Aunt Clara (Winglemire) helped her father sell caskets. When a customer came in, Clara used a little stool to climb up in the casket so the family could see how it would look with their loved one. If it wasn't what they wanted, they would choose something else. Don Winglemire said the family wasn't sure if it was true until Fred Barton came back to town. He grew up in Holly and lived with his grandparents. He told Don that when his grandfather died, they went down to pick out a casket. Sure enough, Aunt Clara climbed up into a casket for them to view. Don was glad to hear that because his Aunt Clara wasn't doing that when he was growing up. Don quipped, "Modeling caskets must have been a dying art."

Battle Alley was Martha Street

There are several versions of how Battle Alley earned its name. One of them is that a free-for-all was in progress one day. Suddenly, the free-for-all stopped and the contestants formed a ring around two women who were staging a slugging match in the middle of the street. It was then that Martha Street was dubbed Battle Alley, and it stuck.

many historic and stately buildings in Holly, including the Holly Hotel, in the 1970s. The Holly Hotel fell into disrepair and became a transient boarding house and pizza and beer bar.

In 1978, exactly 65 years to the day and hour of the first fire, the Holly Hotel was once again swept away by flames. The hotel quickly recovered, although many of its original furnishings were destroyed.

George and Chrissy Kutlenios, proprietors at the hotel for more than 35 years, have painstakingly restored the Holly Hotel to its former glory in a labor of love, reincorporating every piece of wood, railing, molding, tile and glass which could be salvaged from the 1978 fire.

On Feb. 8, 1980, the Holly Hotel was entered into the National Register of Historic Places.

The Holly Hotel has emerged today as one of Michigan's most renowned restaurants, featuring fine dining by candlelight, one of the state's oldest comedy clubs and hosting a variety of teas and special occasion dinners.

Carry Nation made her mark on local history, when in late summer of 1908, the Pro-Temperance movement advocate came to Martha Street, now called Battle Alley, breaking glasses of spirits and beers, and clubbing patrons of the Holly Hotel with her umbrella.

Nation came to Holly at the invitation of Holly resident Winifred Mott, president of the local Women's Christian Temperance Union. After she was booted out of the Holly Hotel, Nation made her way to other saloons and pubs down Battle Alley. The following morning, she gave a sermon to a crowd of about 200 people. Because she caused such destruction while in Holly, she was arrested and held in the local jail for a short time.

At the time, Oakland County was a "dry" county, but the officials of Holly failed to uphold the law, being home to more than 18 saloons

The village began to celebrate Nation's visit annually in September for nearly 40 years. The Carry Nation Festival was co-founded by the late Ardath Regan in 1973. She personally played the role of Nation until 1990, when she passed her axe and umbrella

During the annual Carry Nation Parade, Regan marched down the center of the village streets, pointing her umbrella at the hundreds of parade-goers along the route, hollering about the evils of alcohol.

A long-time Holly High School history teacher,

Regan, who died in June 2013 at the age of 80, was in 1973 visiting with her friend Ellen Hilty. Among their topics of discussion was what they could do to bring some excitement to the village for the community. As a history teacher, she began researching the story about Carry Nation. It took her two years to prove that Nation had actually visited downtown Holly.

The rest, of course, is history as Holly's first Carry Nation Festival took place in September 1973. Unfortunately, due to inadequate funding, the festival no longer runs.

TRI-COUNTY TIMES I SUBMITTED PHOTO Carry Nation, the Pro-Temperance movement advocate from Kansas, wreaked havoc at Holly bars and saloons during her 1908 visit

About Carry Nation Carrie Amelia Moore was born Nov. 25,

1846, in Garrard County, Kentucky. Her family relocated to Cass County, Missouri, and during the Civil War, to the Kansas City area. Moore married a young Civil War doctor, Charles Gloyd, on Nov. 21, 1867. The couple separated shortly before the birth of their daughter, Charlien. Gloyd died as a result of alcohol the next year. She married David Nation on Dec. 27, 1877. They moved to Brazoria County, Texas, to operate a cotton plantation. After that venture failed, the Nations moved to Medicine Lodge, Kansas, where he was a minister and she operated a successful hotel. She organized a local branch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union (WCTU), and campaigned for enforcement of the state's liquor laws. Nation was also a supporter of women's suffrage and women's rights. Nation and her "Home Defenders" conducted their first raid in December 1894 at a local "pharmacy." Nation led the group into the store and announced, "Mr. Day, the ladies of the WCTU want to see what you have in here," she said. "Women, this is whiskey." The women overturned a keg, rolled it out the door, and smashed the contents on the ground, which they lit and burned. Prohibition became a federal law in 1919, but was repealed in 1933. Kansas voters finally repealed the state's prohibition amendment in 1948. Source: Kansas Historical Society

MCKENNEY & MCKENNEY A. McKenney, the erstwhile District Attorney of Broome County, New York followed his resounding defeat at the polls with the course of action that inspired Huckleberry Finn and Manifest Destiny. Michigan became a state. Generations later, Glen Mitchell, owner of Tax Center in Holly and Mitchell Farms Market on Mitchell Road in Holly Township, hasn't moved far from his roots and remains proud of his family's heritage. "We're probably the oldest continuous farm in this area," said Glen.

James G. Mitchell, who platted Holly Township in 1855, is no relation to the George Mitchell family, according to Glen.

The Winglemire family is now in its fifth generation of family ownership of Winglemire Furniture in downtown Holly. Joseph Winglemire, Sr., moved to America from Ragensburg, Bavaria, to begin his life in Holly with his wife, Christine, and set up shop as a furniture maker in 1858. In 1865, he opened Joseph's Oak & Kitchen Shop.

comes into the store almost every day, but has turned the reigns of management over to his son, John, while daughter Penny Raupp handles buying and bookkeeping. They are proud of their designation as Michigan's oldest family-owned furniture retailer.

The first occupant of what today is known as the Hadley House Museum, built in 1873, was Dr. Daniel D. Bartholomew, who lived and practiced there until the early 1900s. The residence was continually occupied by the Hadley family from one generation to another until 1986, when Arlene Hadley sold it to the Holly Historical Society. Another Hadley family member, Don Hadley, still resides in the village.

The Dryer family, now in its fourth generation of family ownership of Dryer Funeral Home, began its heritage in Holly when Paul Dryer moved here from Muskegon in 1913 to work at the Grinnell Piano Factory. He would sing at funerals at the Albert Steinbaugh Funeral Home, and after he came home from World War I, 10 residents approached him, asking him to consider mortuary school. Each of those 10 loaned him $300 to get started.

Paul Dryer began his funeral business in 1925, with his son Bruce joining him in 1952. Gordie Dryer bought the business from his father, Bruce, in 1996. Paul Joseph Dryer is now the fourth generation on the staff at Dryer Funeral Home.

Many other families arrived later, including the Stilwells, whose grandfather, Paul, arrived in the 1930s to work as a carpenter in the union. Two generations later, Brad Stilwell remains in the carpentry business, having just opened an office for Stilwell Construction on Grange Hall Road.

Harvey Sorensen, whose name graces Sorensen Park on East Holly Road in honor of his long-time efforts with the Holly Township Parks Commission, said that the farm he lives on was at one time a land grant farm in the 1700s. His dad, Horace, came from New York State on the advice of his brother, who had come to Michigan to work for Henry Ford, earning $5 a day at Ford Motor Company.

"It's important we write down our family histories, so they aren't forgotten," said Sorensen, who has retired from his own business, Sorensen Appliance Repair, which he founded in 1960.

HOUSE PLAN OF THE WEEK

Plainview

PLAN 11-079

Stuccoed planter boxes awash with foliage and colorful blooms soften the lines of the Plainview. Arched windows, stucco detailing and a crisp tile roof give this contemporary family home an inviting Mediterranean flavor. The open floor plan makes the home easily adaptable for wheelchair accessibility. It can be built with, or without, a basement. Inside, the single-level floor plan is open and relaxed. Posts provide definition for the entry hall, formal living room and dining room without blocking visual access or ease of movement.

Shortly thereafter, he served as a medic in the United States Army for seven years where he met his future wife, Micki Mead. Tom and Micki married on December 8, 1978 at Ft. McClellan, Alabama. After the Army, Tom went to Mott Community College and the University of Michigan-Flint. He worked as a Programmer Analyst for 27 years. Tom loved watching loved watching his children play sports so much, he became a coach for Marion boys baseball. He coached for over ten years always making sure that every child had the opportunity to play and learn the game. He had a passion for music, trivia, and a good crossword puzzle, always priding himself by doing them in pen. A special thanks to Dr. Samuel Wood, all the nurses at the Hall-Perrine Cancer Center, the Staff of Hospice of Mercy, and all those who helped Tom through his difficult journey. In lieu of flowers, the family requests donations to made in Tom's name to the Hall-Perrine Cancer Center, 701 10th Street SE, Cedar Rapids, lowa 52403, www.hallperrinecancercenter.org. Tom will be dearly missed by all who knew and loved him. He was a gentle soul and was kindly referred to by his children as the "baby whisperer". Brilliant son disappoints Mom

My son is 27 years old. He is extremely smart and has exhibited an interest in avionics from the age of 4. One of the first words he learned was "fuselage." He has had one formal flight lesson, and I always thought he would pursue a pilot's career. From the age of 16, he has held meager, low-level, minimum-wage jobs, even though he calls himself a "genius." He went to junior college and two years at a state university, but dropped out. Then he went to work at a hardware store. I am so disappointed in him and his lack of ambition. He has social anxiety as well, and has never had a girlfriend. I have emailed him about vocational airline mechanic schools where he could learn a trade and have a career, but he doesn't care. He just doesn't answer me. I feel so sad for him and the man that he could become. Should I just back off (which I have for years) or continue to encourage him? He doesn't seem interested. - Disappointed Mother

DICKINSON

You don't seem to really know what kind of man your son has become, because you > are focused squarely on your own disappointments professionally and personally — that you might not know what he is good at. He might be "salesman of the year" at the hardware store, and yet you are pushing him to go to work with airplanes. If he responded to you, he might say, "If you are so eager about airplane mechanics school, mom why don't YOU go?" Your son might be wrestling with anxiety or other issues that you don't know about. But if he has held a job for a substantial period of time, you should be satisfied that he is doing what he wants to do — unless he tells you otherwise. Your son is an adult, not a little child whom you can try to mold to fit your version of what success is. You should back off and set aside your own dreams for him. If you are more accepting now, he might be more open to your influence down the

Most medications increase fall risk

To your

BY KEITH ROACH, M.D.

Good

DEAR DR. ROACH:

You recently wrote that antihistamines used for sleep can increase the risk of falls. Are there any sleep aids that don't increase fall risk?

ANSWER:

Since almost all medications are associated with fall risk, reducing the overall number of medications should be a goal for all of us who prescribe medication for older people. Some medications are more risky than others, such as the antihistamines I mentioned, but also prescription sleep aids such as Ambien, Lunesta and Sonata, antidepressants such as amitriptyline (Elavil) and others, diazepam (Valium) and related drugs. Major tranquilizers such as Seroquel are high risk. Insomnia itself increases fall risk, so effective treatment that doesn't use medications that cause problems the next day is the goal. Melatonin works for some people; melatonin 0.3 mg might be effective and appears to have a lower risk of falls. Better still, non-drug treatment such as cognitive behavior therapy, including sleep hygiene, has no risk of medicationassociated falls and may reduce overall fall risk by improving sleep. Basics of sleep hygiene include avoiding long (longer than 20 minutes) naps, avoiding bright light (including TV and computer) before bed, reserving the bed strictly for sleep and maintaining the same bedtime and wake time every day. A CBT therapist can give much more detailed and personalized information.

14 oz. spaghetti 1/4 cup olive oil

6 garlic cloves, chopped

5 oz. diced pancetta or bacon

1/4 teaspoon dried crushed red pepper

1 lb. cherry or grape tomatoes 11/4 cups grated Pecorino Romano or Parmesan cheese, divided ½ cup chopped fresh basil, divided

- 1. Cook spaghetti in pot of boiling salted water until tender but still firm to bite. Drain, reserving 1 cup liquid. Return pasta to pot.
- 2. Meanwhile, heat oil in large skillet over medium-high heat. Add garlic; stir 30 seconds. Add pancetta and crushed red pepper; sauté until pancetta is crisp, about 3 minutes. Add tomatoes; sauté until soft, about 3
- 3. Transfer tomato mixture to pot with pasta. Add 3/4 cup cheese and cup basil. Toss over medium heat until cheese melts and sauce coats pasta, adding cooking liquid by 1/4 cupfuls if dry. Season with salt and pepper. Transfer to bowl. Sprinkle with basil. Serve remaining cheese alongside.
