LAKE LIVING

Island life

Local lakes provide vacations for some, year-round homes for others

By Hannah Ball

Visiting an island for a vacation is a dream for many, but living on an island is just a typical day for many fortunate tri-county area residents.

Walking a quarter mile to and from her home is usual for 32-year-old Melissa Barcume, who's lived on Stages Island on Lobdell Lake her entire life.

Barcume doesn't just stay on the island all the time — she works as a dental assistant. She parks on the mainland then takes a boat to get to the island.

Stages Island is a small, skinny island home to nine houses near the middle of the lake. On the south side, it's about 15 yards away from the mainland, where residents park their cars.

Barcume has a pontoon and small boat with a tiller motor to get on and off the island.

"Living here is a season to season challenge," she said. Barcume lives on the island year round, unlike many islanders who only have cottages.

There are many islands on the 40 plus lakes in the townships of Argentine, Fenton, Deerfield, Hartland, Rose, Holly, and Tyrone, and many are home to people.

Lobdell Lake in Argentine Township is home to more than 10 islands.

On Stages, Barcume has electricity, plumbing, and water services, but not gas and she heats by burning wood. She said summer is "majestic" while winter requires a lot of hard work.

Her least favorite part about living on an island "would be in the winter when snow is deep, winds are strong, and I have a quarter mile walk home to a cold house and a fire that's almost out," she said.

The island is split between Livingston and Genesee counties. In order to get to the mainland when the ice isn't strong enough to walk on, the Department of Natural Resources lets them put up a footbridge by the south end.

They don't have any rules or regulations on the island, except to have a legal boat to get to and from the island, and they aren't allowed to put in the bridge too early or leave it in too long.

It's harder for the Argentine police or fire department to get to the island in case of an emergency, but Barcume said there hasn't been many problems.

"When I was little, my mom fell and broke her leg in the winter and we had to pull her across on a sled behind the snowmobile," she said. "Other than that, no problems. Argentine Township has a fire and rescue boat."

She said she sees a lot of weird things on the lake because the island is right by the most popular swimming destination on the lake.

"Fights, to parties, to the unspeakable," she said. "If people only knew how much their voices carry."

During the Fourth of July weekend, when hundreds of boaters enjoy the lake, she stays on the island and witnesses how busy the lake is.

"I love it, it is so fun. My favorite weekend," she said.

Barcume said she's never considered moving.

"The best part about living here is coming home. It's like going away for the weekend. It is relaxing and peaceful," she said.

Top chefs' CHEESE PICKS

By Vera Hogan

vhogan@tctimes.com; 810-433-6823

Most cheese lovers have a favorite — and cheese they don't care for that much. There are hundreds of different kinds of cheeses around the world. Here are just a few of them — top chefs' picks and the worst cheeses.

■ Burrata

This bulging, bursting bomb of lactic decadence is like mozzarella's souped-up and much sexier cousin. It's essentially a hollowed-out ball of mozzarella filled with scraps and shreds of mozzarella, which are sometimes soaked in cream. It's the most perishable cheese you can import; in Italy it's eaten on the morning of its production.

■ Gouda

Aged Goudas in general are a revelation for their crunchy, crystalline texture, like some delectable crayon. That plus butterscotch and bourbon flavors makes them practical no-brainers as crowd-pleasing cheeses. Aged goat Gouda offers an extra twist, and it's the perfect retort for those who decry goat cheeses. Goat cheeses made for aging sweeten and mellow with time. Add in Gouda's own personality and you get a smooth, bone-white paste that feels velvety on the tongue.

■ Feta

While Greek Feta is a PDO (protected designation of origin) cheese, made of a blend of sheep and goat milk, the name "feta" has been co-opted by producers in the U.S. for brined white cheese, typically pre-crumbled in cups. Most of the time, this cheese is 100-percent cows' milk and bears no resemblance to the savory, sea-salty chunks of fatty, tangy feta commonly eaten throughout the day in Greece.

The original is so far superior to cheap. You can find 100-percent goat milk versions, but the fat and heft of sheep milk is part of the delicate balance that makes this cheese great.

■ Clothbound Cheddar

Compared to block Cheddar, clothbound Cheddar is less about sharpness and more about complexity: Earthy, caramel, broth or fruity flavors prevail. It's made in a wheel shape, typically 20 to 60 pounds, that's wrapped in muslin or similar fabric and sealed with a semi-permeable fat layer, usually lard. As a result, clothbound Cheddar loses more moisture as it ages than block Cheddar, resulting in a drier, flakier texture than block Cheddar. American clothbound Cheddars tend toward a brown butter flavor, often with a lingering toffee or caramel finish.

■ Bleu d'Auvergne

Bleu d'Auvergne has a white perimeter of unblued cheese, usually covered with white surface mold. It comes in about a six-pound wheel. Its PDO regulations require only four weeks of aging. (Roquefort by comparison sees a minimum of four months.) It looks like nothing special. With Bleu d'Auvergne, the salt is there, but it's held in perfect balance. It's moist and smeary, so if you tried to crumble it atop bitter greens you'd happily wind up with big, irregular chunks. It's mild enough to eat straight, but hearty enough to balance meat or sherry.

■ Limburger

The only way to describe walking into a closet that is storing Limburger cheese is that it smells like you just stuck your nose into some liquid armpit sweat, according to traveleering.com.

Limburger ferments by having bacteria smeared on top of it. It's the same bacteria that you'll find on your own body, which is why this kind of cheese smells like it needs a shower.

■ Pule

Pule is a tough cheese to get your hands on. The real difficulty in Pule is the price, it's $1,700 per pound because it's made from donkey milk. Allegedly, the cheese doesn't taste that bad. It takes about 25 liters of donkey milk to make just two pounds of cheese and then, just for added flavor, it is smoked.

Stinky CHEESE

■ Epoisses de Bourgogne

Said to be Napoleon's favorite cheese, the stench of Epoisses de Bourgogne is so strong that it has been banned from being transported publicly in private vehicles in France.

The cheese is routinely washed in water and marc, a liquor that's a side effect of winemaking and a bit like brandy. In six weeks, you get a powerful cheese that reminds you of some smelly, unwashed laundry.

■ Vieux Lille

Last but not least may be the one cheese that requires the most discipline to eat. It's a salty cheese, which makes it pair very well with a number of dishes. Tradition has it that French miners ate this cheese heartily every day at the bottom of the mine. Perhaps they ate it there because the mine could cover up the smell of the cheese. There aren't many cheeses that actually qualify as "putrid," but this one is by far the winner and the smell just gets stronger with age.

NOTICE OF HEARING OF PRACTICABILITY AND REVIEW OF LAKE TYRONE SPECIAL ASSESSMENT ROLL

TAKE NOTICE that the Lake Tyrone Improvement Board will hold a public hearing on the practicability of continuation of the weed control program on Lake Tyrone. The program would begin in 2017 and continue through 2019, with a total 3-year budget of $128,700. The public hearing will be held on Monday June 6, 2016 at 7:00 p.m., at Hartland Educational Service Support Center, (was the old high school), located at 9525 Highland Road, Howell, MI 48843 in Hartland Township, Michigan.

TAKE FURTHER NOTICE that a special assessment roll has been prepared and is available for public examination at the Livingston County Drain Commissioner's Office located at 2300 East Grand River, Suite 105 in Howell, Michigan, during normal business hours. Said special assessment roll has been prepared for the purpose of assessing the cost of the lake improvement program to benefitting properties.

Immediately following the hearing of practicability, the Lake Improvement Board will review said special assessment roll and hear any objections thereto. An owner or party with interest in real property to be assessed or his/her agent may appear in person to object to the special assessment or may protest such special assessment by letter filed with the Lake Improvement Board at or prior to the time of the hearing. Written objections may be filed with the Lake Tyrone Improvement Board at the office of the Livingston County Drain Commissioner located at 2300 East Grand River, Suite 105 in Howell, Michigan, or mailed to the Lake Tyrone Improvement Board in care of the Livingston County Drain Office, 2300 East Grand River, Suite 105 in Howell, Michigan 48843-7581. If the special assessment is protested as provided above, the owner or any party having an interest in the real property may file a written appeal of the special assessment with the Michigan Tax Tribunal or other court of competent jurisdiction within 30 days after the confirmation of the special assessment roll.

Senate Bill 739: Authorize 2-mill Detroit Regional Transit Authority property tax and limit

To specify that the property tax that the Detroit Regional Transit Authority may collect under a 2012 law may be for up to 2 mills but not more, which at that rate would reportedly extract an additional $300 million annually from Macomb, Oakland, Washtenaw, and Wayne County property owners. Also, to exempt this tax from being skimmed by a "tax capture" authority's tax increment finance scheme.

Reading letters invaded daughter's privacy

DEAR AMY:

My parents divorced when I was 10 years old. My paternal grandmother was the only constant during that tough time. We wrote each other letters and, especially through my tumultuous early teens, she was the one person I thought I could pour my heart out to when everything around me was constantly changing (moving house to house, and town to town). My father remarried when I was 12, and the relationship between my stepmother and me has had its ups and downs over the years so that may be tainting my feelings on this, which is why I am asking your advice. My grandmother passed away in 2014 at the age of 92 (I am 44). My stepmother informed me this past Christmas (two years after her death) that she and my Dad had read all the letters that my grandmother had kept that I had written her as a child/teenager. She asked me if I wanted to have them. I didn't know what to say at the time, except that those letters were written during some very hard times in my life and I didn't want to read them right now. I have no recollection of what I said in them, but I was embarrassed that my private thoughts and feelings as a child had been laid wide open for two people I had not spent very much time with in my life. It's been a few months since this revelation and now I am very angry and upset. Why would they read letters I had written to my grandmother without handing them over to me first? Am I wrong to feel that my privacy has been invaded, in the extreme? Did those letters belong to my grandmother? Should they be available for anyone to read after her death? Or should those letters have been given to me, unread, since I am still alive and I wrote them? — No More Letters

DEAR NO MORE:

My understanding is that, legally, the letters you sent to your grandmother were her property—to show, sell or donate to a library. However, you, as the writer, would own the copyright; they could not be quoted from or published without your consent. So, after your grandmother's death, you still own your thoughts and expressions, but her estate owns the letters themselves. I am currently going through my mother's house (these chores can take years). If I found a bundle of letters written to her by my daughter, I would definitely read them. However, your question does bring up the sensitivities involved. And so, yes — as a parent, I would read them, but should I? Probably not. Your father and stepmother don't seem to have shared any comment or judgment about these letters. Either they are being sensitive to you now (in offering to return them to you without so much as a peep), or perhaps your letters aren't as revealing as you remember them to be.

DEAR AMY:

Long story short, it turns out the guy I was seeing is still married. I gave him an earful already. I've been cheated on before, and both times the 'other women' told me. This allowed me to understand the truth of those relationships and I appreciated it. I feel like telling the wife is the right thing to do, but on the other hand, I don't want to get involved with drama, and while I was thankful to the other women for telling me the truth, who knows what his wife's reaction will be? — Conflicted

DEAR CONFLICTED:

If you have faced this situation from the other side, and appreciated a disclosure, then you should move forward on the assumption that this man's wife might feel the same way. You believe this is the right thing to do, and so you should do it. No — you do not know how she will respond. This uncertainty is the price you will pay for getting involved with a snake.

What are hip replacement options?

DEAR DR. ROACH:

I am 72. Several years ago, because of bad back pain, I had tests and X-rays. The orthopedic physician assistant I was directed to afterward said I'd need hip replacements, or I could get a shot. No more comment than that. At my own insistence, I tried physical therapy instead of a shot. It merely aggravated the situation. Twice since, I've seen the same PA. We have a little conversation, and he bills me for the same advice. He did not display the X-rays, and I didn't think to ask. I've yet to see the licensed doctor in that office. Walking is the one exercise that generally doesn't bother me, so that's how I keep a bit active. Judging by charts, I am about 30 pounds overweight. My leg and hip pains now do have me thinking about having at least one hip replaced.

How do I initiate this? What sort of improved mobility can I expect? How long is recovery? Might my insurance cover a second opinion? What options are there? Which implants are best? — J.W.

ANSWER:

You need a different orthopedic surgeon. He or she will go over all the questions you have — all of which are reasonable, but can be answered only by someone who has examined you, listened to your concerns and knows your particular orthopedic problem. Almost all insurances will let you seek a second opinion.

THE WITCH

In this exquisitely made and terrifying new horror film, the age-old concepts of witchcraft, black magic and possession are innovatively brought together to tell the intimate and riveting story of one family's frightful unraveling in the

New England wilderness circa 1630. New England, 1630. Upon threat of banishment by the church, an English farmer leaves his colonial plantation, relocating his wife and five children to a remote plot of land on the edge of an ominous forest - within which lurks an unknown evil. R, 1 hr. 32 min.

Grilled Chicken Caprese

Grilled Chicken Caprese is fresh, delicious and ready in under 30 minutes, which makes it an easy meal any night of the week.

INGREDIENTS

- 4 chicken breasts
- salt and pepper
- 8 tsp prepared pesto
- 4 roma tomatoes, cut into 12 slices
- 8 oz fresh mozzarella, sliced crosswise and then in half
- fresh basil, chopped

INSTRUCTIONS

1. Heat a grill pan or outdoor grill to medium heat.
2. Pound each chicken breast out so that they are a uniform thickness.
3. Season chicken with salt and pepper.
4. Grill chicken for 4 minutes.

www.lisasdinnertimedish.com/grilled-chicken-caprese

5. Turn chicken over and spread 2 tsp pesto on top of each piece.
6. Top each chicken breast with 2 tomato slices and 2 or three pieces of mozzarella.
7. If you're cooking this on a grill pan, tent the chicken with foil, so the cheese will melt. If you're on the outdoor grill, just put the cover on.
8. Grill for another 4-6 minutes, until chicken is cooked through and cheese has melted.
9. Sprinkle chicken with basil and serve.
