FUNERAL ETIQUETTE

How long should I stay at a visitation?

It is only necessary to stay for a short time; fifteen minutes or so gives you enough time to express your sympathy. Your simple presence will mean a lot to the family. You do not need to stay for the entire visitation, but try not to leave during any prayers that might be offered.

Cookies brought to potluck didn't go over well

DEAR AMY: I recently hosted a summer potluck dinner for more than 50 guests. One friend called me three times to ask if I was going to assign what dishes people should bring and how many people were coming. I told her that I was not assigning dishes, since in my experience potlucks usually work out just fine, and that I had no idea how many people were coming, since people seem incapable of sending an RSVP these days. I gently suggested she might like to bring a salad or side dish. The day of the party, she and her boyfriend arrived with 12 cookies and proceeded to fill their plates. The boyfriend had two plates! My questions are a) what is appropriate etiquette when a couple attends a potluck; should they bring two dishes? and b) how can I politely tell my friend that it is inappropriate for two working adults to bring 12 cookies to a potluck dinner? — Frustrated

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Let's review: Your friend asked you three times what she and her guy should bring. This might have been your signal that she was confused or anxious about it. You refused to assign them a dish, saying that these things have a way of working out. And then, after things seem to have worked out (did anyone at your party go away hungry?), you have a serious problem with the choice they made. A couple coming to a potluck dinner should bring one dish. Their dish should serve between five to 10 people. Twelve cookies is a meager offering for a large potluck dinner, but, then again, as you say, these things have a way of working out. Don't correct your friend after the fact.

DEAR AMY: I have been invited to (and am planning to attend) the wedding of a relative. Only a few people have been invited, and many of the usual collection of cousins and other relatives were not invited. I have not mentioned the wedding or that I am going to the noninvited relatives. I received a call from one of the cousins. There was no mention of the event, but I surmise from the timing of the call and other circumstances that it was an attempt to see whether I had been invited. It's not my place to explain who was or wasn't invited. How do you suggest I handle the situation? — Down Low

DEAR DOWN LOW: You should handle this exactly as you are — discreetly and politely. You have no need to broadcast news of this event to people you know have not been invited. However, if you are asked directly about it, you should be honest.

Green nail syndrome is not easy to treat

DEAR DR. ROACH: For the past four months, I have had an infection around the cuticle of my right index finger. There is green coloration under the nail near the cuticle, and the nail grew rather deformed. I am a gardener and a homemaker, so I tend to wash my hands often. The urgent-care doctor I saw prescribed clindamycin and mupirocin cream. I also was told to soak my finger twice a day. My family doctor took a culture and, because she did not know if I had a fungus or an infection, prescribed Lamisil and levofloxacin. She also recommended saltwater or peroxide soaks twice daily. The culture showed pseudomonas as the cause of the infection. With no improvement, I saw an orthopedic doctor. He told me to continue the soaking and the mupirocin cream. On my second visit, he lanced the area between the cuticle and the nail bed. There was improvement, but the symptoms soon return. The orthopedic doctor spoke of removing the nail as a possible solution to clearing up the infection. Is this my next step, or is there something else I can do? — P.B.

ANSWER: It sounds as though you have the aptly named "green nail syndrome," which is caused by the bacteria you mention, Pseudomonas aeruginosa, and which often is complicated by a paronychia, an infection along the side of the nail. Your orthopedic surgeon is quite right that sometimes the nail needs to be removed; however, many people can avoid that unpleasant procedure (I had to perform it once) with ciprofloxacin (the best oral antibiotic against pseudomonas), antiseptic soaks and by keeping the hands meticulously dry, using gloves and even using a hairdryer to dry the nails after soaking or cleaning.
