GAME SHOWS

ARE AMERICA'S FAVORITE 'SPECTATOR SPORT'

People love a chance to be on TV and win prizes

Whether you make a deal, spin a wheel or name that tune, America's fascination with game shows continues to flourish.

Who doesn't remember the fun of "The Dating Game," "The Newlywed Game," "Wheel of Fortune" and "Let's Make a Deal?"

One Fenton resident, Faye Mattord, now 85, recalls decades of watching "The Price is Right," America's longest running TV game show, and being selected as a contestant on the show in 2008.

“(HOST) DREW CAREY LIKED HER SPUNK. THEY LIKED HER PERSONALITY AND THE WAY SHE COULD JOKE.”

Judy Yelle
About her mother, Faye Mattord, on "The Price is Right"

Mattord, then 76, was vacationing in California with her daughter and son-in-law, Judy and Al Yelle, when the trio decided to try out for the show. They got T-shirts screen-printed with "The Price is Right" phrase, "Come on down!" hoping to be noticed by show producers.

"(Host) Drew Carey liked her spunk," said Judy. "They liked her personality and the way she could joke." Mattord was also the oldest person in the studio audience, which helped set her apart from other would-be contestants.

"She was so nervous," said Judy. "She had to bid on a bunch of items. She bid $12,000 for a surfboard, when she meant to say $1,200. She did really well on the next three items, but didn't make it to spin the wheel."

MEMORABLE GAME SHOW MOMENTS

■ 'You can't say that on TV'

Game shows like "Family Feud," "Jeopardy," and "Wheel of Fortune" are unpredictable in nature because they rely on people shouting out random answers. Hosts can anticipate the kind of answers people will likely give, but many catch them off guard. Here are 10 of memorable moments on popular game shows.

Source: today.com, buzzfeed.com

1. When the late Richard Dawson hosted "Family Feud," one topic was what strangers might talk about. One contestant answered "mutual friends," which was not on the board. Dawson was able to finish the segment, but after the category was finished, he paused everything to laugh for about a minute.

2. In 2015, a "Price is Right" model accidentally gave away a $21,960 car to an undeserving contestant by mistake.

3. Steve Harvey asked contestants on "Family Feud" what a burglar would not want to see when he breaks into a house. Both contestants slammed their hands on the buzzer. Harvey calls on one, and the contestant screams out "naked grandma." To the delight of the audience, Harvey looked baffled and questioned the man on the odds

1992: Michelle Knapp, 18, is watching television in her parents' living room in Peekskill, New York when she hears a thunderous crash in the driveway. Alarmed, Knapp ran outside to investigate. What she found was a sizeable hole in the rear end of her car, an orange 1980 Chevy Malibu; a matching hole in the gravel driveway underneath the car; and in the hole, what looked like an ordinary, bowling-ball-sized rock. It weighed about 28 pounds, was shaped like a football and was warm to the touch. It also smelled vaguely of rotten eggs. The next day, a curator from the American Museum of Natural History in New York City confirmed that the object was a genuine meteorite.

1962: The Cuban Missile Crisis begins, bringing the United States and the Soviet Union to the brink of nuclear conflict. Photographs taken by a high-altitude U-2 spy plane offered evidence that Soviet-made, medium-range missiles in Cuba, capable of carrying nuclear warheads, were now stationed 90 miles off the American coast-line. Tensions between the United States and the Soviet Union over Cuba had been steadily increasing since the failed April 1961 Bay of Pigs invasion.

David Miller, a young Catholic pacifist, became the first U.S. war protestor to burn his draft card in direct violation of a recently passed law forbidding such acts. Agents from the Federal Bureau of Investigation later arrested him. He was tried, found guilty and sentenced to two years in prison.

WEATHER FOLKLORE

By Vera Hogan

vhogan@tctimes.com; 810-433-6823

Chances are, if you were fortunate to have your grandma and grandpa around while growing up, you've heard some amazing tales about predicting the weather.

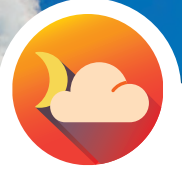

Here are some of them. Are they fact or fiction?

fact or fiction?

"Crops will grow after a year of snow."

That's true, according to the Old Farmer's Almanac. A several-inch layer of snow contains more air than ice. Trapped between the interlocking snowflakes, the air serves to insulate the plants beneath it. When the snow melts, the water helps to keep the ground moist.

"Red sky at night, sailor's delight...red sky in morning, sailors take warning."

While a red sky is not a 100 percent reliable indicator of upcoming weather, science generally does back this saying. In the U.S., Europe and some other parts of the world, weather systems tend to move from west to east, so if there is a red sky at night, when the sun is setting in the west, that could mean there's a high-pressure system to the west that will soon arrive, bringing nice weather with it. But if the red sky is in the morning when the sun is in the east, a high-pressure system might recently have passed, suggesting that a low-pressure system could soon arrive, bringing, cooler, rainy weather. A red sky could also be the result of air pollution.

"It's too cold to snow."

Yes, it really can get too cold to snow, but only if it is treacherously cold, when temperatures are at least 30 degrees below zero Fahrenheit. Snow requires not just freezing temperatures but also moisture in the air, and very cold air tends to be very dry air.

"A ring around the Moon means rain will come real soon."

It could happen. A ring, or halo, around the Moon is caused when the light of the Moon refracts through ice crystals present in high-level clouds. Although these clouds do not produce precipitation, they often occur in advance of an approaching low-pressure system, which often brings precipitation in the form of rain or snow.

"Watch birds in flight."

Air pressure affects many birds. For example, swallows have sensitive ears; when the barometric pressure drops, they fly as close to the ground as possible, where air density is greatest. Generally, low-flying birds are signs of rain; high flyers indicate fair weather. On the other hand, low-flying birds could also mean they may be looking for food.

"When the dew is on the grass, rain will never come to pass."

Dew forms when overnight temperatures drop to the "dew point," the temperature at which water vapor in the air condenses into droplets. This is most likely to occur on cool nights when a high-pressure system is in the area. High-pressure systems tend to bring clear, dry weather, so morning dew does indeed suggest that rain is unlikely.

"Observe sheep, cats, and cows."

Their bodies are affected by changes in air pressure. When rain is on the way, old sheep turn their backs to the wind, cats sneeze, and cows lie down.

"Lightning never strikes twice in the same place."

Don't believe it! Lightning can, and does, strike the same spot repeatedly. Some tall buildings and trees get struck many times each year. Standing where lightning has already hit will not keep you safe in a lightning storm.

ASK THE MECHANIC

Chris Wilkinson,
Certified Mechanic

Q: I have a 2000 Dodge Neon which recently started a humming noise. It didn't affect anything on the driving, just the noise. However, after pulling out of my house it started jumping and making a loud sound, almost like something was falling off the car. Nothing is hanging down, nothing is falling off. It doesn't matter if I'm hitting the gas or brake. It will only do it once in a while. Today, while driving around town, it only did it once. I noticed that if I'm pushing the brake when it happens, the pedal does jump a little. The whole car jumps but doesn't seem like its shutting off or anything. I can't get it into a mechanic until next week and wondered if there is something I can do myself. Please help. -Crystal

A: Crystal, This sounds like a wheel bearing to me, but could be other things like an axle shaft, steering, suspension or brake problem. The way it sounds I would not recommend driving the car until you are able to have someone look at it. To check for a bad wheel bearing, you will need to jack up the front end and support with jack stands. Then, grab the top and bottom of the wheel, trying to move it in at the top and out at the bottom. Go back and forth, you will need someone to look behind the wheel to see where the movement is and confirm that the lower ball joint or tie rods are not loose. Sometimes a wheel bearing will not show any movement and we need to run the vehicle in drive while it is jacked up, listening with a stethoscope for noise. Be very careful if trying this, as we need to get the wheels spinning up to 60 mph sometimes to hear the noise.

Mattord did go home with several consolation prizes, including a sewing machine and a floor lamp, recalled Judy.

Today, "The Price is Right" is a network TV show on CBS five mornings a week, hosted by Drew Carey since 2007. Bob Barker had hosted the show since 1972, when it was re-invented from the original show in 1956.

Another Fenton resident, Chrissy French Castro, was on "Let's Make a Deal" in 2014, showing up at the studio with her boyfriend, Mike Schilling, in wild costumes after scoring free tickets online, while at a business conference in Los Angeles. She played one of the games with host Wayne Brady, in a show that aired April 11, 2014.

Tim Helms, a 1983 Fenton High School graduate, won $415,000 in prize money in 2000, when he appeared with host Maury Povich, on the game show "Twenty One."

Obviously, game shows have been around for years, with "Truth or Consequences" the first game show to air on commercial television in 1941 in the New York market, then going national in 1950.

During the following decade, game shows became a permanent fixture on American TV. Daytime shows like "The Price is Right" produced lower-stakes games and prime time game shows, like "500 Questions," offered higher stakes.

Why are they so popular? It's America's great spectator sport, according to TV

SUMMARY

■ Game shows have been TV's most popular way to interact with viewers since "Truth or Consequences" first aired nationally in 1950.

Guide. People like to watch other people think under stress. It's also more about the fun than the money, according to one "Password" producer in 1967.

America's fascination with game shows has gone up and down during the decades. "Who Wants to be a Millionaire," which debuted in 1999, has been credited for the revival of game show popularity. In 2006, "Deal or No Deal" became a popular series because of its high risk and high reward factor.

In the summer of 2015, ABC-TV brought the popular daytime game show "Family Feud" to prime time, adding celebrities into the mix. "Celebrity Family Feud," hosted by Steve Harvey, became more popular than ever, prompting ABC to not only renew it for a second season, but also revive two other popular game shows from the 1960s and '70s.

Now Sunday nights offer the new "ABC's Sunday Fun and Games," consisting of "Celebrity Family Feud" at 8 p.m., "The $100,000 Pyramid" at 9 p.m. and "Match Game" at 10 p.m.

There's also a Game Show Network, which shows old favorites, like "The Newlywed Game" and "The $25,000 Pyramid," as well as new shows like "Winsanity" and "Window Warriors."

of anyone coming home to seeing his grandma naked.

4. With the letters "The P**nted Desert," one contestant on "Wheel of Fortune" guessed "The Pointed Desert." She was wrong. The next contestant guessed the same thing, and the host had to tell them that no matter how many times they say it, it's not correct.

5. On "Family Feud," during the fast money round, the question was "During what month of pregnancy does a woman begin to look pregnant?" Host Richard Dawson was taken back when the contestant blurted out "September." For the next three minutes, he cracked up when he tried to ask the question again.

SUMMARY

■ All game shows have funny moments, especially with how unpredictable they are. "Family Feud," "Jeopardy," "Wheel of Fortune," and "Price is Right" all have memorable moments.

6. On "Wheel of Fortune," one contestant correctly guessed a two-word phrase with only one letter on the board. The letter was "T" and he correctly guessed "championship match."

7. "Jeopardy" contestants are sometimes known for giving alarming answers. One man, when asked about "The age of this, signaling adulthood, is presumed to be 14 in boys and 12 in girls," said "What is consent?"

8. One answer wasn't TV-appropriate. Harvey on Family Feud asked the question "If you were setting a girl up with Dracula, name something positive you'd say about him." One woman answered, "He's a good sucker." Harvey told her she couldn't say that on TV.

9. In 2015 on "Price is Right," one contestant, who did not have feet, won a treadmill.

10. One contestant on "Jeopardy" made Alex Trebek chuckle. She guessed the name of a flower, which was described as "a disparaging term for people on the political left." She guessed "pansy," when the answer was "the bleeding heart."

DO YOU WANT TO BE ON FAMILY FEUD?

One local family would certainly like to try. Cathie Horan of Fenton Township posted on Facebook information about an audition call for "Family Feud" in the Detroit area on Nov. 5-6, texting her sisters, Marcie Gormley and Therese Henry, "Our family has got to do this."

That spurred Gormley into action, working this week to round up her sisters; her son, Cramer, a twin; her nephew, Kurt, also a twin, to produce a video to send to casting agents.

In an email Gormley sent to "Family Feud," she said, "We've all got personality-plus, we're very outgoing, witty and we all have our teeth!"

Her mom, Margaret Horan, 84, was once in the audience for The Price is Right, but that's as far as their family's game show experience has gone.

Any other local families who'd like to try out for "Family Feud" can audition by emailing Detroit@familytryouts.com.

THESE ARE THE RULES:

- You must have five family members related by blood, marriage or legal adoption.
- You must be a U.S. citizen or have permission to work in the U.S.
- You can't be related to or know anyone employed by FreMantleMedia, Debmar-Mercury, Wanderlust Productions, any affiliate that carries Family Feud or any Steve Harvey production or Foundation.
- You can't be running for political office or have been on more than two game shows in the last year. It must be 10 years since a prior appearance on Family Feud to be eligible to play again.
- It is suggested that contestants are 15 or older due to the content of the questions.

When applying by email, include photos and video, if you can. A video must include at least five family members. Briefly introduce yourselves, tell them where you're from, use props, costumes, play a mock round of the game or anything to stand out.

For more information, visit familyfeud.com or call the Contestant Department Hotline at (323) 762-8467. Contestants could win up to $100,000 and a brand new car.

Argentina hosts open house

Families and community members from across the Linden area attended the Argentine Township Fire Department's open house on Sunday.

In addition to touring the fire station and meeting firefighters and first responders, the Byron Masons provided the Michigan Child ID Program registration, and the North Oakland County Fire Authority (NOCFA) taught kids what to do in the event of a fire.

A representative from Consumers Energy provided information on gas and electrical utilities safety, and members from Move Over Michigan Inc. talked about protecting emergency workers along roadways.

"Our open house had an excellent turnout," said Fire Chief Matt Lafferty. "The main purpose of our open house is to spread the word about fire safety by letting the community get an up-close look at our equipment and demonstrations."

5/16/66 - 10/9/15

Jackie, you are truly missed! But, I am sure it's so beautiful up where you're at. In your shortened life, you managed to achieve what most people never do. You positively impacted so many, many lives, young and old. You'd be so proud of the young lady Punky is becoming. She's happy, caring, smart, funny and kind hearted, just like you. She's tall enough now, that she could look at you eye to eye and thank you for being such a wonderful, loving mom. We, along with all your friends, relatives and co-workers, happily remember the way you "lived" your life!

Live, Laugh, Love!...Joey.

Pay attention to patients

DEAR AMY:

Recently, I took an elderly relative to have a cancerous growth removed from her face. I was grateful that the doctor allowed me to be with my relative during the procedure, but I was appalled that the doctor and his staff chatted to each other throughout the procedure. Occasionally, they would tell my aunt what they were doing, but by far most of their conversation was about their weekends and other ordinary details of their lives. My aunt was fully conscious the whole time, and after the procedure she told me that this made her uncomfortable. I thought it was incredibly disrespectful for medical professionals to treat their patient almost as if she wasn't there, even while they undertook the procedure, but I didn't say anything. What's the best way for patients — and patients' advocates — to remind medical professionals to keep their conversations professional and to keep their focus on their patients? — Appalled

DEAR APPALLED:

I shared your question with Patricia McTiernan, a spokesperson for the National Patient Safety Foundation in Boston. Here is her response: "Many people find it hard to speak up during encounters with health professionals, but it is especially important to speak up if you think something is wrong or if you are uncomfortable. In this situation, the family member could have said: 'I know that you all do this every day, but this is a new experience for us. Would you mind if we limit conversation to my aunt's care?' Alternatively, the relative could have asked to speak privately with a member of the health care team, who could then convey the message to the others. It is vitally important for patient safety that patients and family members be engaged in their care and are recognized as members of the team."

Tips for taking the next step in weight-loss journey

DEAR DR. ROACH:

I have been trying to lose weight, with no results. I have cut back on carbs and sugar. In general, I watch what I eat. I also go to the YMCA and work out — in the water mostly, because my legs hurt so much. I weigh 286 pounds. I would love to lose 100 pounds, but I am not having any luck. When I go to my primary-care doctor, he tells me that I need to lose weight. When I tell him what I have been doing to try to lose weight, he doesn't believe me. I think I need more help with my weight problem. I don't know if I should find a new doctor, or what! — J.S.

to help you lose weight. One of the first things to look at is the medicines you already take. Most primary-care doctors don't know (and I mightn't have, if I didn't work at an institution where research and teaching about this goes on) how many medications for blood pressure, depression, epilepsy and diabetes (among others) can cause weight gain as a side effect. Sometimes switching medications can help a great deal. Most primary-care doctors are uncomfortable prescribing medications for weight loss, especially after the disaster caused by the combination of dexfenfluramine and phentermine (fen-phen). There are newer and safer medications now. Metabolic conditions such as Cushing's disease and hypothyroidism need to be looked for. Careful evaluation of the diet — using food diaries and often enlisting the expertise of a registered dietician nutritionist — is of paramount importance. Since there is so much misinformation, I almost always find people eating unhealthy foods and avoiding healthy ones, to their detriment. You should be congratulated on finding an exercise that you can do, and be encouraged to do so every day. Finally, since you are 100 pounds or so overweight, your doctor also should consider the risks and benefits of bariatric surgery, the most effective way (and only reliable one for most people) of losing that much weight.

ANSWER:

I have heard variations of this story so many times from my own patients that I am sure you are trying. However, losing weight is a very difficult thing to do. Once your body has reached a certain weight, it is incredibly hard to get things turned around. Fortunately, it is possible for everyone to lose weight. But you certainly do need some help. So does your primary-care doctor. As an alternative to getting a new one, I think it might be worthwhile to see an expert in weight loss, since this is a field requiring knowledge of new medications, as well as potentially using medications approved for other conditions in an "off label" way

Dr. Roach regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but will incorporate them in the column whenever possible. Eager to take over the world and remake it in his own image, Apocalypse recruits mutants to act as his powerful "Four Horsemen" — among them is the tortured Magneto (Michael Fassbender), who believes humanity might be a lost cause after a personal tragedy. 1/4 cup powdered sugar
1/2 teaspoon pumpkin pie spice
1-2 tablespoons milk
2 tablespoons chopped pecans, optional

INSTRUCTIONS: In the bowl of your stand mixer, combine the flour, brown sugar, yeast and salt.
