Kellogg's... the history behind our morning cereal

This is a postcard photo of the Toasted Corn Flakes processing plant in Battle Creek during the cereal maker's earliest years.

WILLARD DIGITAL COLLECTIONS

The cereals shown above were popular in the 1950s and '60s, when sugar-coated favorites were morning staples.

TRI-COUNTY TIMES | TIM JAGIELLO

The world's largest cereal maker began as a health food for patients at Battle Creek sanitarium

By Sally Rummel

news@tctimes.com; 810-629-8282

When you think of your morning bowl of cereal, perhaps you recall the Snap! Crackle! Pop! of Rice Krispies or the booming voice of Tony the Tiger saying "They're Great!!" with each bite of Frosted Flakes.

What you may not know is that today's popular cereal brands got their start from the accidental discovery of Kellogg's Corn Flakes behind the walls of Battle Creek's sanitarium in the late 1800s.

John Harvey Kellogg and Will Keith Kellogg were brothers from a Seventh-Day Adventist family in Battle Creek.

According to Historytoday.com, John got his medical degree from the University of Michigan Medical School, and was a fanatical advocate of a healthy lifestyle, which he believed included vegetarianism, abstinence from alcohol, tobacco, tea, coffee, condiments and even sex, plus minimal quantities of eggs and dairy products.

He became president of an Adventist sanitarium at Battle Creek in his mid-20s, providing a place for people to restore their health. Former patients there included Mary Todd Lincoln, the widow of Abraham Lincoln; Henry Ford, President Warren G. Harding, pilot Amelia Earhart and James Cash Penney, founder of JC Penney department stores.

The sanitarium, listed on the National Register of Historic Places, is now a federal office, the Hart-Dole-Inouye Federal Center.

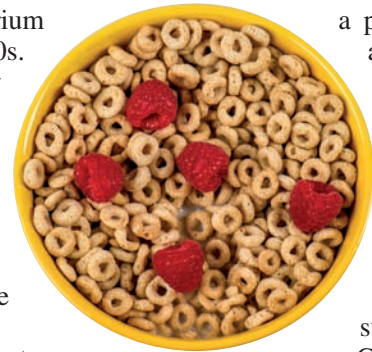

The Kellogg brothers continued to invent healthy, meatless breakfast foods for sanitarium patients before accidentally concocting a process that allowed wheat to flake in 1894. Two years later, corn flakes were formulated and they became an immediate success.

Charles William

Post got in on the act while recuperating from a nervous breakdown at the sanitarium. He was inspired to open his open spa and continued his interest in coffee products and breakfast foods. By 1897, he was selling what is today sold as Grape-Nuts and his own brand of corn flakes, Post Toasties.

Today, Kellogg's and Minnesota-based General Mills dominate the cereal industry in the U.S., each with about 30 percent of the market.

Worldwide, Kellogg's is the largest cereal maker.

In 2015, Post Foods purchased the former Malt-O-Meal Co., creating the third largest cereal company in the U.S. Now known as Post Consumer Brands, they are headquartered in Lakeville, Minnesota.

Kellogg's is still headquartered in Battle Creek, but has branched out into cookies, crackers, toaster pastries, cereal bars, fruit-flavored snacks and frozen waffles, manufacturing products in 18 countries and selling to 130 countries around the globe.

The Battle Creek plant used to allow company tours, retiring them in 1986 for safety reasons. Kellogg's Cereal City-USA, a tourist attraction opened in 1998 to tell the Kellogg's story in a hands-on museum format, closed in 2007.

Today, visitors to Battle Creek can learn the Kellogg story by visiting the John Harvey Kellogg Discovery Center at 480 Van Buren St. W.

Ninety percent of U.S. households still buy cereal, but new breakfast favorites have come into the marketplace, from protein smoothies to Greek yogurt and frozen waffles. However, cereal is still the main morning staple for many Americans.

New products containing cereal, from breakfast bars to protein shakes, are attracting today's Millennials, ages 18-34, who value portability and convenience in their breakfast choices, according to Money.cnn.com.

Chew on this ...

On Fridays, I work from 7 a.m. to 1 p.m. Once I get out, I pick up a few things from the grocery store before going home to enjoy my favorite afternoon of the week. I put my purchases away and turn on the TV to "The Chew," which airs at 1 p.m. Monday through Friday on ABC. Sometimes, if I get home early enough I can catch the last half of Friday's episode. If not, I just watch the recorded version, along with the rest of the week's episodes, on "On Demand" over the weekend.

I love this show not only because I love food and crave new ideas on how to prepare meals, snacks and more. It's because the hosts, guests and audience are so relaxed, and fun. No one cares about anyone being black, white, Asian, Hispanic, gay or whatever. They all just have so much fun together, with preparing foods as the main theme that no one cares about anything else. It is very relaxing, not to mention entertaining and educational.

I'm not the greatest cook in the world, but I love trying. Sometimes I make great new meals and other times they are epic fails. My husband and sons are willing Guinea pigs (usually) and I appreciate their honesty whether it's good or bad. It's usually good though.

Since becoming a diehard "Chew" fan, I have learned so much. I usually make my own sauces and soups now, from scratch. I look at the label on a can of soup at the store and cringe. The sodium content is enough to send your blood pressure skyrocketing before even opening the can. I truly have become a member of the sodium police force.

Although I try to eat well at all times, my big downfall is chocolate. There will always be something chocolate around for me. I have cut a few things out of my diet permanently though. The first was corn. I do like corn on the cob during the season, but I have determined that something that looks the same all the time, no matter what happens to it, is not good for the digestive tract, at least not mine.

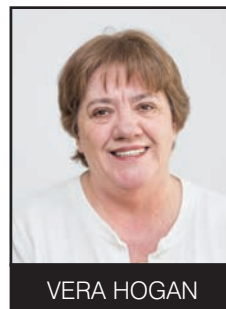

The second thing I've cut out of my diet is shredded lettuce. I see shredded lettuce and think 'why, why, why?' If you like it on tacos, it tastes so much better to line a taco shell (hard or soft) with a big fresh piece of leaf lettuce before adding your mix and other veggies.

The most recent thing I've cut out is unpeeled cucumbers. OK, so the peel is supposed to be nutritious but it tastes horrible. It's hard to chew, is waxy like a candle and to me akin to what it would be like to eat the watermelon rind. Ick! Besides, I have a cucumber salad recipe handed down from my mother that is amazing. She would come out of her grave if she knew I made it with unpeeled cucumbers.

That's it so far, but I am sure there will be more as time goes on. I have just decided that with certain foods, 'I'm not gonna eat that and I don't have to.'

Although I have a healthy outlook on life when it comes to food and what I eat, I sadly am not the poster girl for a perfect figure. There's a reason for that. One, I'm way past my bikini days and too old to wear one even if I could. Secondly, I hate hate hate exercise. The only thing I like that remotely resembles exercise is swimming (lounging in a pool) and shopping (doing a two or three-lap walk-about, with a shopping cart, around the inside perimeter of a big store like Walmart).

Fair warning though, if I happen to be in the store near the TV section between 1 and 2 p.m., I'll probably be watching "The Chew."

10 REJECTED CEREALS

By Hannah Ball

hball@tctimes.com; 810-433-6792

Everyone knows popular brands like Cheerios, Frosted Flakes, and Cocoa Puffs. What many don't know is that for every one successful cereal brand, there are dozens of failed ones.

SIR GRAPEFELLOW

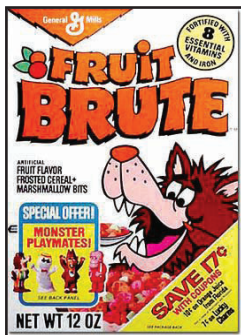

This cereal, which came out in the '70s, featured an off flavor - grape. The food looked like purple cheerios, with little "grape starbits." The mascot was a fictional knighted man who enjoyed flying an airplane with no hands.

SUGAR CORN-FETTI

Featuring a typical pirate with a round belly, peg leg, and an eye patch, Sugar Corn-Fetti tried to use ads to sell the product. However, marketing a product and blatantly saying it's coated in sugar turned out to be a bad idea.

FRUIT BRUTE

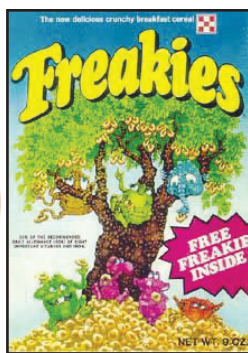

Even cereal can be too scary for kids. This General Mills failed cereal showed a breakfast-loving wolf on the front. The ads became too violent for kids, and they were scared away.

GRINS AND SMILES AND GIGGLES AND LAUGHS

When it comes to weird mascots, Cecil the GSGL machine might take the cake. He could only make cereal when he was annoyed, and parents didn't buy in to that.

Having a bowl of Freakies for breakfast doesn't sound that desirable, and the cereal eventually died out. It featured alien goblins by the name of Gargle, Cowmumble, Grumble, Hamhose, Snorkeldorf, Goody-Goody and their leader, Boss Moss.

PRINCE OF THIEVES

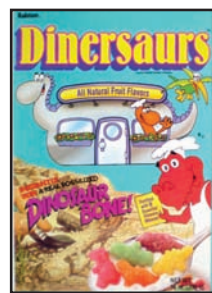

Mascots are supposed to be involved in the cereal in some way, but the Prince of Thieves was not. He was seen, in full archer garb, ready to shoot an arrow on the cereal boxes. Parents preferred brands less likely to encourage their kid to shoot arrows at people.

MR. WONDERFUL'S SURPRISE

This cereal relied on the pull of a "surprise" in the center of each piece of cereal, which was just a chocolate or vanilla center. The biggest surprise was when consumers opened the boxes to find that the crispies tended to burst, and the inside was coated with chocolate globs.

DINERSAURS

What could have been a prehistoric fantasy land became a band of dinosaur food servers serving food out of one of their friends, who was made into a makeshift cafe.

CRUNCHY LOGGS

This sweetened corn and oat cereal were shaped like logs, which proved to be too weird for consumers. It featured a beaver in human clothes eating the cereal, but it never took off.

MAGIC PUFFS

General Mills tried to promote Magic Puffs as their neutral cereal filled with a mysterious cream. But when the mascot became a talking hat, the cereal flopped.

Sylvia "Dixie" Kovacevich Shutes
 1922-2017

Sylvia "Dixie" Kovacevich Shutes moved from this life to the next on April 4, 2017 after celebrating her 95th birthday. She was born February 26, 1922 in Hurley, WI to Vaso and Johanna Kovacevich. After graduating from Hurley High School and working at Joe's Pasty Shop she moved to lower Michigan where she proudly worked on .50 caliber Browning machine guns to help in the war effort. She married Warren G. Shutes before he shipped out on his naval tour in the Pacific. After WWII they lived in the Fenton area where they raised their children before eventually moving back to Ironwood. Dixie loved life; she was delightfully mischievous, filled with spirit and vitality and was an inspiration - but mostly we remember that she was just so damn much fun and such a great joy to be around. She was also something of a Florence Nightingale, taking care of everyone in her circle including siblings, parents, husband, nieces and nephews, friends, neighborhood kids and especially her own children and grandchildren. In later life she became an accomplished painter, birdwatcher and gardener. We children remember her as a fierce and indomitable protectress. We knew she was a true lioness and were pretty sure she was a Montenegrin Princess as well. Dixie is survived by her two sons Richard (Lizzie) Shutes of Merritt Island, FL and Madeline Shutes of Stockholm, WI; daughter Janice (Scott) Cobb of Duluth, MN; nine grandchildren and 15 great-grandchildren; many loving nieces, nephews and countless friends. She was preceded in death by her parents; her beloved husband Warren on February 22, 1986; son, David; grandson Jason; brothers Rocky, Eli, Bob, Vootsie and George Kovacevich; sisters Jay, Skippy, Gertie and Helen and Dorothy who died in childhood. A Celebration of Life service will be held at Saint Simon's Orthodox Church in Ironwood, MI with her nephew, Bishop Anthony Michaels, presiding. The committal service will follow at Riverside Cemetery in Ironwood. Arrangements are under the direction of Lakeside Memorial Chapel, Wakefield, MI, Jerald Rocco, owner. Condolences may be expressed through Legacy.com. In lieu of flowers the family requests that donations be made to St. Simon's Orthodox Church, 226 E. Harding Ave., Ironwood, MI 49938.

Bed sores linked to serious health problems

DEAR DR. ROACH:

I am 89 years old and just learned that I have the first stages of bed sores on my buttocks. My dermatologist said that I should stay off of it as much as possible and apply hydrocortisone cream. I have COPD, and I need to sleep sitting up. I wonder if you have any other suggestions to help my pain and discomfort. — A.A.

ANSWER:

Bed sores (also called pressure ulcers) are potentially serious problems that require immediate attention. We “stage” bed sores into four categories. Hopefully you have stage one, where there is skin redness, usually over a bony prominence such as the sacrum, the hand-shaped bone at the base of the spine. A stage two bed sore may be a shallow, open ulcer or a blister. At stage three there is full-thickness loss of the skin, while a stage four has exposed muscle or bone. Sometimes, it is impossible to stage ulcers from their appearance alone. A stage one bed sore often is treated with a clear film for protection. Hydrocortisone cream is surprising to me, since steroids can thin the skin when used excessively, which you certainly don’t want to do. The pain should be treated, but you should be taking this as your body’s warning that there is a problem. The key to preventing further injury is to find a way to take pressure off the area. Sleeping sitting up puts all your weight on your lower back, buttocks and thighs, which in turn puts these areas at a high risk for pressure ulcers. There are several ways to combat this, including different kinds of mattresses and pads, and even a device that adjusts automatically to pressure. Changing positions frequently (every two hours or less) is critical if you are not using a special mattress or pad. There are wound-management specialists, both nurses and doctors, with expertise for your particular situation. I would ask your doctor about finding and consulting with one. People with COPD are at high risk for poor nutrition, and making sure you are getting adequate protein and calories is critical, as poor nutrition is a big risk for serious bed sores. I strongly recommend a visit with a nutritionist. Also, perhaps your COPD treatment could be optimized to make it easier to sleep in a supine (lying-down) position. This means a revisit with your regular doctor or the consultant doctor who is treating your COPD.

DEAR DR.ROACH:

I am writing to you regarding your recent column about psoriasis. My husband spent most of his life suffering from severe psoriasis, until he was told of an all-natural solution: cilantro. In a matter of a few months he was completely symptom-free, and remains so after more than a year. He simply adds a few sprigs of cilantro to a garden salad once a day. —J.L.

ANSWER:

I also have read that eating fresh cilantro helps psoriasis. I couldn’t find any study that looked at this, and people responding to online support groups reported mixed results. However, it is very safe and might be worth a try.

Dr. Roach regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but will incorporate them in the column whenever possible. Readers may email questions to ToYourGoodHealth@med.cornell.edu. Cat’s bad breath defies treatment

DEAR PAW’S CORNER:

My cat “Sheena” has had horrible bad breath for the past six months, and nothing seems to help. She is almost 14 years old, spayed and in good health. I supplement her diet occasionally with a pill — brewer’s yeast and garlic — crushed up in her food. I also use special dental-care dry foods and dental-care treats. I brush her teeth (when she lets me) and massage her gums. I also put parsley in her wet food occasionally. What else can I try? — Deborah W., via email gums and contributes to a foul odor — other conditions like diabetes, digestive disorders, cancer and even sinus inflammation have bad breath as a symptom. So make sure cats with chronic halitosis get a complete exam to rule out other underlying issues. As for home solutions to simple halitosis: You’re doing all the right things. However, as Sheena ages, her immune system might make her more vulnerable to gum disease. Keep it up, especially massaging her gums and trying to brush her teeth. Instead of a brush, you could try swiping her teeth with a cotton ball or very soft cloth soaked in warm water, a gentle swipe from the gum line downward. Additionally, be careful with the amount of brewer’s yeast and garlic you give her daily, because garlic is toxic to cats. Follow the right dosage for her weight.

DEAR DEBORAH:

From your email it appears that Sheena sees the vet regularly, which is important for senior pets in particular. While bad breath (halitosis) often is due to dental problems like gingivitis — where bacteria builds up in the mouth around the

Cajun shrimp in foil

Yield: 4 Servings. Serving Size: 1 packet

INGREDIENTS:

- 1 tablespoon Cajun or Creole seasoning
- 24 (1 pound) cleaned large shrimp
- 3 ounces fully cooked Turkey/Chicken Andouille sausage (Applegate), very thinly sliced
- 1 medium zucchini (8 ounces each), sliced into 1/4-inch thick rounds
- 1 large red bell pepper, seeded and cut into thin strips
- 1 1/2 cups corn kernels
- 1/4 cup chopped fresh Italian parsley leaves
- 1/4 cup chopped fresh basil leaves
- 1/4 cup dry white wine, such as Pinot Grigio
- 2 tablespoon olive oil

DIRECTIONS:

1. In a medium bowl, combine the Cajun seasoning, salt, and pepper. Add the shrimp and toss to coat.
2. Place 4 large (10 x 18-inch) pieces of heavy-duty aluminum foil on a flat surface.
3. Divide the sausage, zucchini, bell peppers, and corn among the foil pieces, placing the vegetables in the center of each. Top each with shrimp (about 6), sprinkle each with 1 tablespoon of the parsley and 1 tablespoon of the basil.
4. Drizzle each with 1 tablespoon of the wine and about 1/2 tablespoon of the oil. Fold each piece of the foil to form a packet, sealing tightly and leaving a little room inside for air to circulate in the packet. The packets may be refrigerated (or frozen) at this stage.
5. To cook, preheat the oven to 425F. Arrange the packets on a baking sheet and cook until the shrimp is cooked through and the vegetables are crisp-tender, 13 minutes. Open the packets slowly, being careful of the hot steam. Transfer the shrimp, vegetables, and sauce that has accumulated to individual bowls or rimmed plates.

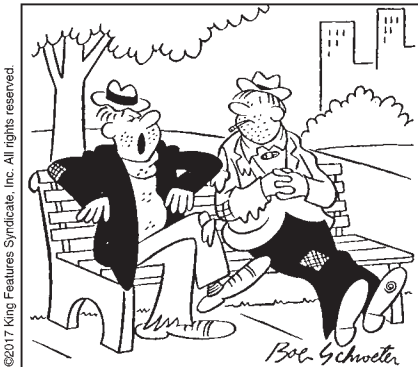

To freeze and heat:

1. Place uncooked packets into sealable plastic bags, keeping them level and upright. (Two packets fit well into a gallon sized bag). Freeze for up to two (2) months.
2. There is no need to thaw before cooking.
3. Remove the frozen packets from the bags and place them on a baking tray in a cold oven set to 425F.
4. Once the oven comes to temperature, continue to cook for 35-40 minutes.
