Waterfront dining offers new perspective of area lakes

By Sally Rummel • news@tctimes.com

Mike and Diane Durkin of Argentine Township have lived on Lobdell Lake full time since retiring in 2005. One of their most enjoyable summer activities is taking friends and family out for a cruise in their pontoon, then enjoying a dockside stop at an area restaurant.

Whether you're dining dockside on the water or patio-side enjoying the view, waterfront dining seems to be more popular than ever before.

"It's so convenient," said Diane, 69. "We have so many friends on the lake. It's what we like to do."

Some waterfront restaurants have become local landmarks, with a long history of serving boaters and other guests alike.

Snappers-on-the-Water on Bennett Lake used to be Twin Gardens before

“About 60 to 70 percent of our diners come off the boat.”

Melissa Palmer
Fenton Moose Club general manager

owner Kirk Norman took over 14 years ago. He says a lot of people make this a destination on the water, including the motorcycle community that rides from all over Michigan to get here.

"We do unique things to keep our name out there," said Norman. "The word gets around." While Snappers is known for its nightlife and a younger crowd, Norman says their Bloody Mary Bar on Sundays is drawing older patrons, too.

Recently re-done outdoors with a Key West theme, Norman says that the atmosphere is its biggest selling point. "People want to enjoy the lake and forget about their problems. They just want to have fun," he said.

Lakeview Bar & Grill in Argentine Township has undergone several name changes in the past, but one thing remains

How classmates dressed mattered to me

After graduating from eighth grade in 1967, my family moved to the Chicago area because my father was promoted within the Sears organization. A couple of years later, he was assigned to the Sears Tower (now the Willis building) as a structural engineer. Construction on the building began in 1970.

Before that move, we lived in a rural area just west of Kankakee, Illinois. I went to an old country school and my eighth-grade graduating class boasted 28 students.

I went from growing up in that little school to a high school in Skokie, Illinois, a suburb of Chicago. There were three floors and more than 3,000 students in my new high school. There were four principals, one for each class. My class graduated close to 800 seniors in 1971.

More than 95 percent of the students in my high school were Jewish. Where I grew up there were two predominant religions — Lutheran and Methodist. I never met a Jewish person and knew nothing about them except for the little we learned in school and Sunday school.

Talk about culture shock.

I quickly discovered one advantage to being in an almost all-Jewish school. We had three days off in September for Jewish holidays, including Rosh Hashana and Yom Kippur.

Another thing I discovered immediately was that the vast majority of my classmates were rich. I mean really rich. They lived in mansions, had the nicest cars and wore the finest clothes. The incredible clothes bothered me the most. I had OK stuff to wear, but not like these girls. We are talking genuine cashmere sweaters, real silk blouses and wool skirts from Ireland and Scotland. Splurging on clothes meant Sears in my family, and we got a discount.

I could not compete so I did the next best thing — I rebelled. As luck would have it, this was the start of the “hippy movement,” so I fit right in. My favorite thing to wear to school was a pair of hip-hugger, bell-bottom jeans, with a long sleeved tie-died T-shirt. Over that, I wore a suede jacket with fringes laced with colorful beads. Sometimes I wore a big floppy hat.

After graduating, I didn't go off to college to become a scientist, doctor or lawyer like so many of my wealthy classmates. I went to a junior college and chose liberal arts instead. My wealthy classmates and their friends took trips to Paris and Honolulu. My friends went to Vietnam.

You might say that not being able to afford the clothes I wanted to wear as a teenager changed the direction of my life. That wasn't the only reason, of course, and I am not unhappy about it because this is when I discovered I had other talents, like writing. I also am blessed with a great job and many Jewish friends.

However, if someone were to ask me today if uniforms should be required attire in schools, and thinking about how I felt when I was a teenager, I would opt to level the playing field and say “Yes, definitely yes.”

Triple C's Lakeshore Grille in Fenton Township opened this season on Silver Lake Road, off Lake Ponemah.

GOOD FOOD

constant — a beautiful view of Lobdell Lake.

With 18 boat slips and a dedicated dockside menu concept, this indoor/outdoor eatery attracts a lot of boaters. “This is our first summer (as Lakeview),” said Michael Dunn, general manager. “It's gone well so far. We're getting busier every week. It's a 50/50 split between boaters and regular customers enjoying the patio, just depends on the weather.”

Also serving customers on Lobdell Lake is Northshore Market. Best known for their pizza, pizza bites, burgers, wings, ribs and deli sandwiches, the Conway family serves food on their back patio and also delivers to boaters on the lake.

“We deliver on our Jet Skis,” said Briana Conway. “Usually on weekends, especially Saturdays, our biggest delivery day. We can deliver beer, liquor, anything.”

Anything, that is, except ice cream — another of Northshore Market's biggest summer sellers. “Everyone gets ice cream,” said Briana. “They'll enjoy a cone out on the back deck or on the picnic tables.”

The Fenton Moose Lodge on the north end of Lake Fenton has been serving customers lakeside for decades. The only catch is you have to be a member, or be accompanied by a member, to dine at the lodge.

That doesn't seem to slow down the constant boat traffic and indoor dining. With 1,700 members, the Fenton Moose Lodge keeps getting busier and busier. “About 60 to 70 percent of our diners come off the boat,” said Melissa Palmer, general manager.

They can accommodate up to 18 boats at one time, and if it's too busy, Palmer said people sometimes take their boats home and come through the back door. “We don't deliver dockside, unless someone is elderly or handicapped,” she said. “You've got to come in off your boat. Lots of people get take-outs.”

The weekly dinner specials really draw a crowd to “the Moose.” “Friday Night Fish Fry is our busiest night,” said Palmer. “We'll serve 350 to 400 dinners within four hours.”

Other weekly specials are on Tuesday — Rib Night, Wednesday — Steak Night and Thursday — Burger Night.

The newest waterfront restaurant is Triple C's Lakeshore Grille, on the shore of Lake Ponemah. Open for just two weeks, new owners Joe and Cheryl Schoenemann say that the majority of lake people are excited to have a place to go.

“About 75 to 80 percent do want to sit outside on the deck to enjoy the beautiful view,” said Cheryl. Some of their most popular menu items are fish and chips, pork and beef sliders and burgers.

Right now, boaters can use the boat slips and enjoy eating at picnic tables at the waterfront. “They can pick up their food or we can have someone run it down to them,” she said.

The owners say that they want Triple C's to be more of a family restaurant than a bar, although they do serve liquor. “We've got a lot of plans for the future,” said Cheryl.

SUMMARY

■ Waterfront dining is a popular concept in the tri-county area, especially on some of the largest lakes in Fenton and Argentine Township.

This brings new meaning to the word "seafood." Would you eat tuna eyeballs? Tuna Eye is one of the weirdest foods consumed around the world. This slippery, soft, white creamy blob is a popular winter delicacy in Shirako, Japan.

Gaebul is a species of marine spoon worm. It is widely referred to as a Fat Inn-keeper Worm or the penis fish. This spoon worm is commonly eaten raw in Japan and especially Korea. This is often eaten with salt and sesame oil in Korea. In Hokkaido, Japan, this is called ruttsu and served as sashimi. Wanna try? People actually eat these.

Fugu, also known as puffer fish or blowfish, are commonly consumed in Japan. It's a risky proposition to eat Fugu, as the fish is highly poisonous if prepared improperly. According to Rosofsky's entry in "They Eat That? A Cultural Encyclopedia of Weird and Exotic Food Around the World," thrill-seeking connoisseurs crave the lip and tongue-tingling sensation they say a highly skilled fugu chef can create by leaving a non-lethal trace of poison on the fish. It's that element of danger that entices the adventurous eater. Rosofsky also notes it's that risky business combined with the rarity and mild silky texture that makes this one so desirable.

The Japanese have long known about the incredible health benefits of eating delicious insects. Rumor has it that Japanese emperor Hirohito in the 1900s favored a meal of cooked rice and canned wasps with soy sauce and sugar. Insects are currently eaten in many dishes, though the latest craze is insect sushi with all manner of tasty creepy crawlies served on top.

Sannakji (live octopus) is a famous dish in Korea. The octopus is chopped or kept whole, and you eat while it is wiggling on a dish. However, eating the whole one is quite dangerous because the suction cups on the tentacles can cling tenaciously and you could get one stuck in your throat.
