ODD jobs

Many professional careers start with unusual jobs that teach work ethics, behavior

By Sally Rummel
news@tctimes.com

Shelby Badal of Fenton had a job for 48 hours that has still taught her lessons years later.

Six years ago, she was a single mom who needed a job quickly to replace a job she had lost. She got a job at Lovers Lane in Flint, working with adult novelties and lingerie.

“I couldn’t eat pickles for years.”

Sue Mann
Former pickle factory worker, now a teacher

“I assumed it was just stocking items and ringing up purchases,” said Badal, 32. “But I was told to give hand massages and ‘try out’ novelties. The last straw was when ‘dancers’ were stealing undergarments. That was it, I quit.”

But her short foray into the world of adult entertainment taught her a few valuable lessons.

“I learned to keep an open mind about jobs and to get more information about the duties you’re expected to perform before accepting a job,” she said.

Today, she runs the subsidized spay and neuter clinic at Adopt-A-Pet in Fenton.

“I much prefer working with animals,” she said.

Chances are whatever job you have today is different from the kind of work you have done in your past. It’s also likely to be a different career than you might have in the future.

The average person will change jobs five to seven times during their working life, and that by the age of 42, you will probably already have had about 10 jobs, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Nearly two-thirds of these jobs are held by people between the ages of 18 and 27.

Many of these early jobs aren’t exactly careers, but are stepping stones into learning more about your own job preferences, as well as the world of work ethics and behavior.

Sue Mann, 52, today is a sixth-grade science teacher at Lake Fenton Middle School, but will never forget the two summers she spent during college, packing pickles at the Vlasic Pickle Factory in Memphis, 20 miles southwest of Port Huron.

Gary Porter, 31, of Holly, started out as a teen making wands and staffs to sell during Renaissance fairs. Today, he works in construction, but still sells many similar items at higher prices than ever, because of the popularity of Harry Potter. He’s shown here with a staff he has fashioned out of PVC pipe.

“I had an interest in science but also a love of art, and it was a good way to combine the two,” said medical illustrator Lorie Gavulic. She designs ads for the Times during the day, and creates medical illustrations by night. Lately she’s been working on a cancer surgery book for the American College of Surgeons through a medical publisher. She has an Master of Fine Arts in Medical & Biological Illustration from The University of Michigan. She was first hired by the University of Michigan Medical Center but began freelancing after her children were born. To properly illustrate, she uses photographs or observes surgeries in real life. She had to dissect a cadaver as part of her training. “At first it was difficult, I passed out the first time I observed surgery, but I eventually got used to it.” She no longer draws with pencil and paper, but with a touch-sensitive tablet with stylus.

What do your shoes say about you? The picture below screams "old European man tourist," to some but hey, who are we to judge. White socks and sandals might be comfortable for all we know.

www.redonline.cdnds.net

We can't even imagine where a woman would wear something like this; perhaps the operating room if she's a doctor or nurse, or at a Hazmat scene. Maybe?

www.s-media-cache-ak0.pinimg.com

www.s-media-cache-ak0.pinimg.com

These are supposed to be "Lady Gaga" shoes. We have a hard time believing she would stick her feet into a bed of maggots, even if they're not real. Then again, she's the one who wore a meat dress.

This is more like it. Happy little shoes, the Bob Ross of shoes, the 'my mommy made these for me' shoes. Dorothy should have worn these heels in the Wizard of Oz. Now they're something to kill a witch over!

WHAT'S THAT ON YOUR FEET?

UGLY SHOES AND MORE UGLY SHOES; WHERE DOES IT END?

www.s-media-cache-ak0.pinimg.com

For just this one time, perhaps we should feel sorry for the rattler that gave up his life for these horrifying shoes. Maybe there's a purse, or a belt to match.

www.s-media-cache-ak0.pinimg.com

OK, here's an idea. The young people who allow the waistbands of their jeans hang low around the bottom of their bottoms can rock this look. You have to admit, it's a clever way to repurpose old jeans.

www.s-media-cache-ak0.pinimg.com

Talk about fishy looking. The long batting eye-lashes and tiara are an especially nice touch. We're kind of surprised though that there are no goldfish swimming around in the actual heel.

Just sayin'...

Better safe than sorry

Last week, I took a phone call from a local woman whose story made my heart sink.

This lady, who has asked to remain anonymous, told me about an experience she had last Saturday, Aug. 19. She asked that I share it with the public so that people will be more aware.

"There's a new brand of creeper out there," she said. "They are bold and brazen."

The woman said on that beautiful Saturday, she was on her way home from the Woodward Dream Cruise. When she arrived at Milford and White Lake roads, and passed the Highland Oaks County Park, she saw a young lady in her early to mid-20s walking on the wrong side of the road, with traffic. She was wearing exercise clothes and was sporting a big set of headphones.

"As I passed her, I thought how dangerous it was for her to be walking alone on the wrong side of the road," the caller said. "I no sooner passed her when I looked in the rear view mirror and saw two men walking behind her."

The caller said the bigger of the men looked to be about 50 and the smaller of the two about 40. She said they were picking up the pace, getting closer to the girl they appeared to be pursuing.

Gut instinct took over and "a sick feeling washed over me," she said. She turned around and went back. She pulled up, rolled down her window and said, "Do you realize there are two guys behind you, walking fast? They mean business."

The young woman's car was parked in the Highland Oaks County Park parking lot. The only other vehicle in the lot belonged to the men pursuing her, a four-door gray Cadillac sedan.

The caller said she convinced the walker to get in her car. I would not take her back to the parking lot. "They saw me, saw me pick her up. They got into their car and gunned it. They were heading toward Rose Township. We ended up calling 911."

The caller said throughout the entire ordeal, the young woman did not seem too alarmed, even though she knew two men were following and gaining on her.

I contacted the Oakland County Sheriff's Office and spoke with a deputy familiar with this situation. He said my caller did file a police report and assured me that they will exercise due diligence and take some steps to learn what they can.

VERA HOGAN

The deputy did say he was confident, based on the information that he has, that there is no connection to the yet-unsolved murder of Ally Brueger on Fish Lake Road last July 30, 2016. He said there is no reason to scare people away from safely enjoying the parks and trails in Highland and Rose townships because one likely has nothing to do with the other.

The deputy said they, too, did not think the young lady was too concerned. "I think she thought the woman who picked her up may have been over-reacting," he said.

In the meantime, the deputy did caution walkers and joggers using the parks and trails to be aware of their surroundings at all times and not go alone.

I don't think my caller was over-reacting, and I am glad she did what she did because like her, I do strongly believe in gut instinct and that it's better to be safe than sorry.

"There were very few opportunities for teens, so most of us ended up working at the pickle factory," said Mann. "It was horrible. I packed spears into jars and put them on a conveyor belt for 10 to 12 hours a day, seven days a week. By the end of the summer, I was craving mental stimulation and couldn't wait to get back to school."

That job taught her the value of hard work, putting 100 percent into whatever you do. "I also learned that that would be the kind of job you'd have for the rest of your life if you didn't get a good education," said Mann. "I couldn't eat pickles for years."

Gary Porter of Holly works in construction by day and spends his "off-time" doing a job he has done since he was a teen.

"I took old broom sticks and branches and turned them into wizard staffs and wands and sold them at Renaissance fairs," said Porter, 31. "I'd travel with my dad, who also worked the fairs. I'd carve the wood in his backseat with a trash bag on my lap to catch the shavings."

Today, Porter still has that same knife and makes the staffs and wands, but commands much higher prices, thanks to the popularity of Harry Potter. He sells his items on Craigslist, rather than traveling to fairs.

The median tenure for workers age 25 to 34 is 3.2 years at one job.

Source: Bureau of Labor Statistics

Sandy Schlitters, 53, of Fenton Township, used to drive a cab in her hometown of Plymouth, back in the days before Uber and Lyft. "After high school, I didn't know what I wanted to do," said Schlitters. "We were busy. My hours were all during the day, so I didn't have a lot of the crazies. I did a lot of airport runs and had a lot of regulars."

Today, she's an accountant for a property management company in Fenton. "Being a cabbie, I learned how to deal with all kinds of people," said Schlitters, who still has her chauffeur's license. I still like to talk with people. It was a good experience."

Annette Reichert, 36, is a sixth-grade teacher at Lake Fenton Middle School, but teaching wasn't always her dream job. "I started out studying sports medicine and PT (physical therapy). Then I found out I hated feet — I decided right then and there to be a teacher."

SUMMARY

■ People change jobs much more often today, usually having the most jobs between the ages of 18 and 27, when they learn about the world of work and work ethics.

At a job fair at Central Michigan University, she applied for a biology lab job that involved taking care of mice, snakes, alligators and lizards. "We'd feed the alligators chickens and mice," said Reichert. "It was pretty interesting. I wasn't a big fan of the snakes, though."

She worked in the lab all four and a half years she was in college. "It was every day and I rotated weekends. It taught me to be compassionate for animals, no matter how small, and that they deserved my best."

Reichert said she's still afraid of snakes, especially those she encounters outdoors. "I'll stick with dogs and cats," she said. "I also volunteer at Adopt-A-Pet."

Managing road trips with pets in tow

Family vacations may not be complete without the family pets joining in the fun. But it's important for pet owners to plan ahead when taking their furry friends on vacation.

Family vacations provide opportunities for parents and their children to unwind and make memories that last a lifetime. Such excursions can be made even more memorable when taking the family pet.

Traveling with animals in tow is not as simple as beckoning the family pet to the car when it's time to hit the open road. The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals notes that travel can be stressful for both pet owners and their pets. To help ease that stress and ensure all members of the family, including those covered in fur, have a great a time on vacation, the ASPCA offers the following tips to pet owners taking their animals on road trips.

- Check and update your pet's collar. Even if pets are microchipped, it's important to make sure they wear collars imprinted with their owners' names, phone numbers, email addresses and any additional relevant contact information. Make sure

- the phone numbers listed on pets' collars are the numbers where you can be reached while on vacation and not just landline home phone numbers.
- Prepare your pet. In the weeks before the trip, pet owners should start to prepare their pets for the trip by taking them on short drives. Lengthen each of these mini trips so you can build up a travel tolerance in your pet and acquaint the animal with car travel before vacation begins.
- Purchase appropriate travel gear. Some pet owners cannot imagine making long road trips with their pets in crates. But crating pets during road trips is entirely possible without making pets uncomfortable. The ASPCA advises purchasing crates that are large enough to allow pets to stand, sit, lie down and turn around. It's also important to secure the crate so it does not slide around in case of sudden stops or when driving on curvy roads. Pet owners who don't want to put their pets in crates should keep pets harnessed in the back seat at all times, never letting the animal hang its head out the window while the car is in motion.
- Pack some travel items. Human beings tend to bring snacks and beverages along on road trips, and such items are necessary for pets, too. Pack water, food and some snacks for pets, but never feed them in a moving car. Take some time to feed pets at rest stops. The ASPCA advises feeding pets a light meal three to four hours before beginning the trip and serving pets only bottled water to reduce the risk of stomach problems. In addition to food and water, pack some toys to keep pets occupied during the trip. Such toys can also calm animals' anxiety by providing them with something familiar.
- Do not leave pets alone in the car. Leaving pets alone in a car is unsafe no matter what the temperature is outside. Pets are susceptible to heatstroke when left in hot cars and can freeze to death when left in cars during winter. When planning your road trip, confirm that any hotels you plan to stay in accept pets.

HEAL THE LIVING
Heal the Living follows three seemingly unrelated stories that carefully weave together: a French teenager and his friends on a surfing road trip that leads to tragedy; a woman in another town who learns that her weak heart is beginning to fail and action must be taken; and two teams of doctors and medical experts who struggle through their day-to-day attempts to save lives. Ultimately, it is an impassioned story of personal connections that philosophically, spiritually and literally plumbs the depths of the human heart.

I was named ACM Male Vocalist of the Year in 2015.

I am an actress born in Louisiana on March 22, 1976. As a child I appeared in TV commercials. I gained fame for the portrayal of a seemingly dimwitted character. But I've had many diverse roles, including one that earned me an Academy Award.

SMOKED ST. LOUIS STYLE MAPLE GLAZED BBQ RIBS

Sometimes we all just need a little SLOW roasted BBQ to tame the soul. I got the idea for these ribs from betterbegrilled.com, and their take on Maple Cayenne Ribs. — Trish

INGREDIENTS
• 1 BIG slab of St. Louis style ribs

For the RUB:
• 1/4 c. brown sugar
• 1/2 tbsp salt
• 1 tsp cinnamon
• 1 tsp ground cumin
• 1 2 tsp ground black pepper

For the GLAZE:
• 1/2 c. maple syrup
• 1/4 c. Frank's Red Hot Sauce
• 1/4 c. butter
• 1/4 c. ketsup
• 1 tbsp lemon zest
• 2 tbsp lemon juice

DIRECTIONS
To Prepare: Preheat your charcoal grill for indirect grilling. Mix all of the rub ingredients together and rub both sides of the ribs with your hands. Place ribs on the grill over the indirect heat. Close the lid and cook for 4 hours at 250 degrees F. Mix all glaze ingredients together, and simmer for 15 minutes. Glaze the ribs 10 -15 minutes before taking the off the grill. The Ribs are done when the meat has shrunk off about 1 inch from the bones. Cover the ribs, let them sit for 15 minutes before serving!
