Another sex assault charge for area man

Newest charge involves incapacitated victim

Michael Todd Sackrider, 53, of Fenton Township posted $100,000 bond on Tuesday, April 10 and was released from the Genesee County Jail.

Dating back to alleged incidents in 2006, he is facing five felony counts.

A story about Michael Sackrider, 53, of Fenton Township was on the front page of the Times last weekend. He’s now facing a new sex assault charge.

Jason Juengel, 17, of Mundy Township, works in the milking parlor of Corner Oak Farm, his family’s dairy business. The Michigan dairy industry is struggling with a nearly four-year wave of low profits, lower demand and a worldwide milk surplus.

These factors are pushing some dairy farmers out of the business. See story on 15A.

Registration tags being considered for kayaks, canoes

Starting in 2019, anyone in Michigan using a kayak, canoe or paddleboard could be required to pay a fee and register their water craft.

On Feb. 1, the Michigan State Waterways Commission (MSWC) voted 6-0 to approve a list of recommendations for proposed legislation to pay a fee and register their water craft.

Loss of students costs millions in per-pupil funding

PART 2 IN A SERIES
By Vera Hogan
vhogan@tctimes.com; 810-433-6823

Last week we talked about a growing problem of well-meaning, college-educated young adults unable to leave their parents’ home because of their expenses and what their monthly bills would be if they did move out, and how the bills might far outweigh the salaries they are able to earn. As a result of this financial fiasco, young adults are waiting longer to get married and even longer to start families or choosing not to have children. Not having children is and will continue to have an impact on enrollment in local schools.

A community without good schools becomes a place where no one wants to live, which negatively affects the local economy, starting with real estate. On the plus side, communities in the tri-county area are consistently working on projects to improve their attractiveness as great, safe places to live and raise families.

Lake Fenton Community Schools
Julie Williams, superintendent for Lake Fenton Community Schools, said she has not seen a decline in enrollment in Lake Fenton.

Track closed during school for safety of students and staff

By Vera Hogan
vhogan@tctimes.com; 810-433-6823

Several readers have submitted Hot lines that the Fenton High School track is closed, and senior citizens who wish to walk the track for health and fitness reasons can no longer do so. They referenced senior citizens whose tax (millage) dollars paid for the track.

Be advised, however, that according to Superintendent Adam Hartley’s March “We Are Fenton” newsletter, which is mailed to staff and parents each month, and is posted to the district’s Facebook page, the track is only being closed during school hours and/or track practice.

Hartley said in the newsletter that a safety gap was identified during Fenton High School and A&G Middle School walkthroughs. “… in the past we have kept the track open for the community during school hours. “Based on our efforts to make FAPS (Fenton Area Public Schools) as secure as possible, we will not open the track for community use until after school hours and/or track practice. Thank you for helping keep FAPS a safe place to teach and learn!”

Due to numerous threats and attacks taking place at schools nationwide, school personnel around the country are taking as many measures as possible to secure their facilities for the safety of students and staff.

Being an online bully could be a felony in Michigan

By Hannah Ball
hbah@tctimes.com; 810-433-6792

Cyberbullying could soon become a felony in Michigan, with a sentence of up to 10 years if it causes the death of a victim.

This bipartisan-supported bill, House Bill 5017, passed 91 to 17 in the House of Representatives March 22, with 88 percent of Republicans voting “yes” and 76 percent of Democrats voting “yes.”

The bill is currently in the Senate. The bill is sponsored by Rep. Peter Lucido (R-Dist. 36), who said while speaking before the House Law and Justice Committee, “I’m a firm believer in the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, but hate speech, threats and intimidation are not universally accepted forms of free expression.

“We’re seeing more and more of this kind of behavior online and it’s not free speech. It’s permanently damaging lives and encouraging suicide among the young and old alike. It has no boundaries and Michigan is overdue to establish limitations.”

In the bill, “cyberbullying” is defined as posting a message or statement in a public media forum about any other person, if the message is intended to place a person in fear of bodily harm or death, and expresses an intent to commit violence against the person, or if the message is intended to communicate a threat knowing that it will be viewed as a threat.

If the cyberbullying causes the death of the victim, it is a felony punishable by up to 10 years imprisonment and/or a $10,000 fine.

Rep. Joe Graves (R-Dist. 51) and Rep. Hank Vaupel (R-Dist. 47) voted in favor of the bill.

Graves said, “Cyberbullying is an issue that is all too common in today’s world. The people who cyberbully others should be held accountable. HB 5017 doesn’t restrict anyone’s ability to communicate. Rather, it simply creates a punishment for communication that crosses the line and causes harm to another person.”

Genesee County Undersheriff Chris Swanson said, “Genesee County Sheriff Robert Pickell supports anything that protects the victims of bullying. Cyberbullying has been a long-standing platform where people can hide and be anonymous. People can anonymously attack others without any factual basis.”

Swanson said this legislation is enforceable if there’s enough probable cause to believe that a crime has been committed. Although, it will have to be on a case-by-case basis because, “What’s bullying to me might not be bullying to you,” he said.

He also questioned if the law will require the victim to say “stop” to the cyberbully in order for it to be prosecutable.

“There is free speech, but it becomes bullying when the intent of the sender is to cause harm to another individual. … when that person wants to self-harm,” he said. “It’s no different from bullying in school. It’s about protecting people.”

Punishment

A first offense would be punishable by up to 93 days in imprisonment and/or a $500 fine. If the cyberbullying causes serious injury, the punishment is worse. A person who violates the law “in a manner that involves a continued pattern of harassing or intimidating behavior and by that violation causes serious injury to the victim is guilty of a felony punishable by imprisonment for not more than five years, a fine of not more than $5,000 or both,” according to the bill. If the cyberbullying causes the death of the victim, it is a felony punishable by up to 10 years imprisonment and/or a $10,000 fine.

Michigan State Demographer data on student enrollment

Steve Lenar, assistant superintendent for Holly schools, provided information and a January presentation on this topic from Eric Guthrie, Michigan’s state demographer with the Department of Technology, Management & Budget, Bureau of Labor Market Information & Strategic Initiatives.

In his presentation, Guthrie says between 2003 and 2015, the median age for mothers having a first child increased from 25 to 26, and the median age for all mothers increased from 27 to 28 years.

Guthrie says migration, or more families moving into the state of Michigan, will help to increase enrollment numbers in schools. "Migration patterns are shifting and looking better for the state," he said. In 2017, estimates show the state had a positive net migration for the first time since before 2001.

"Domestic migration is still negative, but trending in the right direction," he said. "Migration will bring school-age children in addition to those that are a result of natural increase."

Guthrie said age at first marriage and first child are both increasing, which is resulting in delayed fertility. Fertility in Michigan and the U.S. more generally has been trending downward for decades.

Guthrie’s presentation also states:
• The Total Fertility Rate for Michigan in 2014 was 1.81 versus 1.84 for the U.S.
• Declining fertility will translate into declining enrollment over the next five to 10 years, but enrollment should increase some following that period of decline.
• Increases will not get back up to the peak, but declines will stop for a time.
• Any decrease or increases in fertility and enrollment will not be experienced evenly across the state.
• Some areas are seeing increases in enrollment even in this period, while other areas will continue to see declines over the entirety of the millennial generation’s period of fertility.

Parts III and IV will deal with affordable housing and future job/salary outlook for Millennials.

Detroit Institute of Arts’ Inside/Out program to place high-quality reproductions throughout downtown

By Sharon Stone

Beginning at 8 a.m. Monday, April 16, residents and visitors to downtown Fenton will notice newly placed works of art, thanks to the Detroit Institute of Arts (DIA) and its 2018 Inside/Out program.

Michael Hart, assistant city manager and Downtown Development Authority (DDA) director is liaison between the city and the DIA. He said the city recently learned that Fenton was one of the communities selected to participate in this program.

Now in its ninth year, the 2018 Inside/Out program brings high-quality reproductions of masterpieces from the DIA’s collection to outdoor venues throughout each participating community. The program is sponsored by the John S. and James L. Knight Foundation.

The reproductions will be on display throughout the downtown Fenton area, from April to July. Eleven works of art will be clustered within walking or bike-riding distance. The DIA will provide walking maps to the city of Fenton for distribution, including placement on the city’s website, cityoffenton.org.

On Thursday, April 19, the city’s Art & Cultural Commission will host a public wine and cheese reception at the Fenton Community & Cultural Center in the rec room, from 5:30 to 7 p.m. Walking maps will be handed out during this reception.

Roger Sharp to be honored for lifetime achievement

Has served community as funeral director for 50 years

By Vera Hogan
vhogan@tctimes.com; 810-433-6823

He said if he had to do it all over again, he would choose the same profession.

It’s because of this kind of passion and dedication to his work that Roger Sharp is being honored for serving 50 years as a licensed funeral director.

He will be awarded for that lifetime achievement at the Michigan Funeral Home Directors Association Convention in Mt. Pleasant on Wednesday, April 18.

Speaking from his home in Naples, Florida last week, Sharp said he actually began his career in the funeral home business in 1962. “I washed cars for Bowles Funeral Home in Linden,” he said.

After that Sharp served in the U.S. Army and graduated from college. “I got my funeral director license in 1968 and bought my first funeral home in Swartz Creek in 1970,” he said.

Today, with the help of his family and nearly 50 employees, about half of whom work part time and the other half full time, Sharp operates four successful funeral homes in Genesee County, including Fenton.

Sharp can’t say enough about his family and how much their dedication and contributions mean to him.

“My kids are a very big part of my life,” he said. “All of them treat the business as if it were their own, including my son-in-law Mike Scully, who has been working with me for 35 years.”

Over the past 50 years, Sharp said the biggest change in the funeral home business is the availability of professional help.

“Death takes no holiday,” he said. This is not a part-time effort. Help for the families of the deceased must be available days, nights and weekends.

“All of my children are licensed funeral directors,” he said. They are: Jennifer Sharp Scully, Stephanie Sharp Foster and Roger (RJ) Sharp II.

“We have 10 licensed directors on staff. We have been doing about 1,200 funerals a year,” he said.

Sharp said as soon as his kids could walk, they started helping. “It’s been good for my family and it’s been good for me,” he said.

At 74 years young, Sharp said he still meets with families. And even though he takes some time in Florida during the winters, he maintains an office there and still arranges funerals for hometown friends, including transportation when needed.

“While in Florida I’ve made four funeral arrangements in Genesee County and had the deceased transferred back to Michigan,” he said.

But Sharp Funeral Homes offer much more than just funeral services. They offer assistance to veterans, UAW members, have grief support resources and help people with prepaid funeral services, Social Security, Medicare, insurance and other tasks that can be daunting for people during their time of grief. The Sharp family also gives back to the community in a variety of ways.

Sharp said humbly that he has been fortunate with his successes. “I’ve received a number of awards, awards that I probably didn’t deserve,” he said.

Will his grandchildren carry on with the Sharp Funeral Home business? Sharp laughed and said, “Well, the jury is still out on that one. My oldest grandchild is 16 and he’ll be doing some part-time work this summer.”

Roger Sharp has a fondness for great cars. Here he stands by the vintage vehicle the family often uses during parades and other civic functions.

MURDER CASE

While both were played for the courtroom, Akl sat with his head down. He could be seen and heard crying softly during the 911 call.

Akl, 17, has been charged with open murder in the March 4, 2017 shooting death of his friend Brady Alan Morris, who was reportedly living at Akl’s Moffett Drive home at the time. He’s also charged with receiving and concealing a stolen firearm and two counts of felony firearm.

Preliminary exams are the first opportunity for the judge to hear evidence of the case. This exam brought several media outlets to the courtroom of 67th District Court Judge David Guinn. Akl’s family and friends packed the gallery area, but many had to leave because police had officially interviewed them regarding the case and they might be called on to testify.

Fenton Police Officer Julie Bemus along with her partner, Sgt. William Andringa, were first on scene at Akl’s home. Bemus testified about arriving on scene, securing the firearm, and Akl being handcuffed by her partner. The investigation was turned over to the Genesee County Sheriff’s Office, which has jurisdiction in Fenton Township, where the home is located.

Assistant Prosecutor Anthony Williams set the basics of the scene, while Manley worked to emphasize Akl’s emotional state.

Manley submitted the graphic 911 call into evidence, and his assistant, Scott Bigger, played it for the courtroom. During the call, Akl screamed that he shot his friend.

“I literally killed my friend,” Akl could be heard screaming in the 911 call. He wailed “ma’am,” repeatedly to the 911 operator, and said “I pointed a gun at him and pulled the trigger. I killed him, ma’am. I killed him.” Akl said that his friend’s brains are on the wall, and that he threw the gun.

The 911 operator asked him where the gun was and told him not to perform mouth-to-mouth resuscitation, but to put pressure on the wound.

The call ended with Akl begging to be shot in the head. “I have to die,” he said.

Manley also submitted and played the patrol car footage after Akl was cuffed and placed in the back seat of Andringa’s patrol car. He was heard screaming, “I’m 16 and I killed my best friend in the whole world.” He begged to be beaten by the police, and that the police not hurt his family. He screamed “Brady” repeatedly and said, “Why did I do this.”

Bemus testified that according to dispatch, Akl wanted “suicide by cop,” a term used when someone wants to provoke police into shooting someone who wanted to commit suicide by threatening the police, leaving them no choice but to shoot.

Andringa said Akl was not combative or a threat to police, and he approached officers with his hands up. He agreed with Manley that Akl was “hysterical.”

The preliminary hearing will continue May 7 at 1:30 p.m., which could include the testimony of Akl’s friend, Krieg Beardsley, who confessed to stealing the Glock 9mm handgun from a safe and bringing it to Akl’s home, where it was used regularly for shooting in the basement crawl space of the home.

With bond denied, Akl has remained in custody at the Genesee Valley Regional Center since his arrest.
Life skills training should begin at home

By Vera Hogan
vhogan@tctimes.com; 810-433-6823

When members of the older generations were in high school, they learned important life skills at home and at school. Home economics classes taught cooking and sewing and skilled trades classes like metal shop, auto shop and more.

Area high schools no longer offer this type of training, so much of what our kids need to learn about life must begin at home. We asked some local parents what they do to teach their children important life skills. Here’s what they had to say:

Katy Hughes, the Downtown Development Director and assistant village manager for Holly, and her husband are very involved parents.

“My daughter Olivia is 11 years old and an only child. My husband and I have been teaching her skills to become an independent tween/teen/adult,” Hughes said. “She helps make dinner, folds and puts away her laundry, and is in charge of taking care of all of our pets (two dogs, two cats, one guinea pig, one fish, and five chickens).

“Olivia likes to tinker with her grandpa in the barn and is learning what is required to restore an antique Ford 8N tractor and eventually it will become hers to learn how to drive (before driving a car — tractors are very forgiving),” Hughes said.

“She has a savings account at Metro North Federal Credit Union and adds birthday money to it. Whatever money she saves will be matched by my husband and me at the end of each year,” she said. “We are teaching her about compounded interest and the importance of saving and investing. Olivia will be selling things that she has made at a Juried Art Show. As a young entrepreneur, Olivia knows that it takes money to make money. She bought most of her own art supplies and is eager to see some return on her investment.

“It is our job as parents to raise confident, independent young people. They are the next generation and they deserve to be taught well,” Hughes said.

Veronica Pheasant of Argentine Township said she is teaching her kids what her mother and grandmother taught her.

TAX DAY

Tax day is April 15, but this year it falls on a Sunday. This would mean that tax day would be April 16 instead, but April 16 is also a federal holiday — Emancipation Day.

This is the day in 1862, in Washington, D.C., that President Abraham Lincoln signed the Compensated Emancipation Act, freeing slaves.

Hence, tax day 2018 is April 17, according to IRS rules. Taxes are due by midnight that day.

Go to IRS.gov for more information on filing taxes.

The seven most overlooked deductions

1. Unreimbursed employee expenses
   You may be able to deduct unreimbursed employee expenses on your 2017 return (but not after that). But there’s a big catch: The expenses will be deductible only to the extent that they, along with other miscellaneous expenses such as tax prep and investment advisory fees, exceeded 2 percent of your adjusted gross income. That’s potentially a high hurdle to clear.

2. Job-search expenses
   If you shelled out a lot of money to look for a job in 2017, you may be able to deduct some of the costs of your quest. A few examples: out-of-town trips for interviews, mileage driving to meetings ($0.53 cents a mile), fees for outplacement agencies, resume prep and registration fees for events related to your line of work.

3. Moving costs for a new job
   If you landed a job last year that required you to pick up roots, your timing was excellent, tax-wise. The deduction for moving expenses for a new job also got the ax starting in 2018. Plus, beginning this year, any moving costs your new employer reimburses you for are taxable (that perk used to be tax-free).

To qualify for this deduction, however, you must meet what the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) calls the “distance test.” Your new workplace must be at least 50 miles farther from your old home as your previous one was from your former home. In other words, if where you used to work was 10 miles from home, your new job must be at least 60 miles from that same home.

4. State and local taxes
   The deduction for state and local income, sales, and property taxes hasn’t gone away entirely, but in 2018, the maximum you can write off is $10,000 in total. If you stood in line in late December to prepay your 2018 property taxes due to the new tax law, you likely won’t forget that. What’s easier to overlook are the state income taxes you paid last spring with your 2017 return. For those tax returns, the threshold for qualifying to deduct medical expenses fell from 10 percent of your adjusted gross income to 7.5 percent. That’s still a tough hurdle to clear, but the drop could make a difference.

5. Casualty and theft losses
   If your car was stolen or your home was broken into or damaged in a disaster last year, you can write off damages not covered by insurance or recouped in a salvage sale. Between hurricanes, floods and wildfires, 2017 was a big year for disasters, of course. However, unless you have the misfortune to live in a federally declared disaster area, you won’t be able to deduct casualty and theft losses after 2017.

6. Dependent exemption
   The 2017 tax law killed off personal exemptions starting in 2018, replacing them with a nearly doubled standard deduction. So for 2017, you can take exemptions worth $4,050 (excluding, in most cases, Social Security income).

7. The deduction that expanded: medical expenses
   Although the new tax law ended many write-offs, it expanded the deduction for medical expenses, at least for 2017 and 2018. For those tax returns, the threshold for qualifying to deduct medical expenses fell from 10 percent of your adjusted gross income to 7.5 percent. That’s still a tough hurdle to clear, but the drop could make a difference.

Young girl honored by MLK Foundation

Addisyn Goss, 11, and siblings, are honored for Snuggle Sacks humanitarian effort

By Sally Rummel
news@tctimes.com; 810-629-8282

Addisyn Goss and her family spent the last weekend of spring break out of town, but it wasn’t for a typical vacation like many families take this time of year. She and her family traveled to Atlanta, Georgia where Addisyn, 11, and siblings Sheridan, 16, and Jaxson, 15, were among 15 young Americans recognized by the Martin Luther King Foundation for their humanitarian efforts.

The founder of Snuggle Sacks — Survival Kits for the Homeless, Addisyn was just 8 years old in 2015 when she met her estranged grandfather, who had been homeless for a number of years. She made it her mission to fight the reality of homelessness, by providing bags of basic necessities and distributing them in the poverty-ravaged streets of Flint.

Yolanda Renee King, granddaughter of Martin Luther King and Maryn Kippy, granddaughter of A.D. King, Martin’s younger brother, hosted the youths on Saturday, April 7 at the Georgia Freight Depot for “their extraordinary work for humanity.”

This event was the culmination of a week of special events honoring Martin Luther King on the 50th anniversary of his assassination on April 4, 1968.

The Martin Luther King Foundation called Addisyn to let her know that she had been selected for this once-in-a-lifetime honor. All three siblings were honored, but Addisyn spoke on behalf of the group as the founder/CEO.

Her entire family became involved in homelessness relief efforts, including her siblings; her mother, Stacy Daul; her stepdad, Andrew Daul and her dad, Jason Goss. “Both of her dads are very involved,” Stacy said. “They alternate taking days off to make deliveries, attend non-profit meetings, and so on.”

“It’s nearly impossible to put into words the experience we had,” Stacy said. “We met so many influential members of the King family, plus all the other kids who were also honored for making a difference. To know that the King family sought my kids out and invited them to this is amazing, and the ultimate honor and moment of pride.”

The Goss siblings also were introduced to Martin Luther King III and Dr. Bernice King, children of Martin Luther King, Jr. “The kids said it is the highest honor they have ever received,” Stacy said.

Since those early days of Snuggle Sacks, when the Dauls’ home basement was used as a distribution warehouse, this cause has grown from just one family’s mission, but to a cause embraced by the Fenton area community, as well as nationally.

Addisyn was featured in USA Today one year ago, raising awareness of Snuggle Sacks to a national cause.

Now officially a registered non-profit organization, Snuggle Sacks packs about 500 bags each month, filled with new socks, gloves, small blankets, lip balm, applesauce, toothbrush/toothpaste, hand/foot warmers, raisins, crackers or any protein-type snack, travel-size toiletries, personal hygiene items and much more.

These bags are then distributed to the homeless through shelters, state organizations and street outreach, now extended to Lansing and Detroit Metro areas. Snuggle Sacks works with Carriage Town Ministries and Homeless Angels to distribute, as well as various other organizations.

Each Snuggle Sack costs about $10, from the price of the bag to its contents, and the cost is paid for through individual donations and partnerships with local businesses. Even more than the gift of these survival bags is the human touch provided by the Goss and Daul families to the homeless people they encounter. “They don’t get treated as humans,” Stacy said. “The crying, the hugging, that goes further than the bag does. I still get teary-eyed every single time.”

One of Snuggle Sacks’ biggest milestones was moving into its new office/warehouse next to Animal Health Clinic in Fenton five months ago. Packing days at the warehouse are usually Wednesdays and Sundays and people can sign up to volunteer or make donations on the organization’s website, snugglesacks.org. On Saturdays, the family delivers the bags to about 15 shelters.

The Daul family has added homeless advocacy to the Snuggle Sacks cause, attending Homeless Advocacy Day in Lansing on Wednesday, April 11, hoping to change the system for getting identification cards. This is one of the biggest obstacles for the homeless in securing jobs and housing, Stacy said.
By Tim Jagielo

Mundy Twp.—It takes approximately three hours to milk 180 cows. Wearing rubber boots, Corner Oak Farm co-owner Julie Juengel walks up and down the milking parlor floor, making sure the milking machines are attached to the cows. She shuts off the ones that are done for the night.

Juengel’s daughter, Amy, and son, Jason, 17, are helping to clean and treat the udders. When finished, they guide the cattle away from the parlor. Most know where they’re supposed to go, but are wary of anything new in their path—like a journalist with cameras.

While everything appears to be fine at the farm and the grocery aisle, there is deep trouble for Michigan’s dairy farmers.

For nearly four years, dairy farmers have been receiving approximately half the price for their milk, and dealing with escalating expenses. Worldwide, there is a surplus of milk, which is good for everyone but the milk producers.

This surplus is pushing some producers out of the business and some have even considered suicide, according to milkbusiness.com.

At Corner Oak Farm, the husband/ wife team of Peter and Julie Juengel are hanging on by a thread, trying to keep the business going until it’s profitable again.

“It’s rough,” Julie said. “We’re managing, we’re making cuts.” They’ve laid off employees, so everyone stepped in to do more.

“It makes me feel like, why the heck am I doing this, still,” Peter said. He said Michigan farms are in rough shape and it won’t be fixed anytime soon.

Farmers are used to sawing milk prices. Abad every year so often is weathered by equity and savings. However, going on four years is too much for many farmers to endure.

Peter and Julie are living paycheck to paycheck, and working with their bank to make their loans more manageable.

Too much of a good thing

There is a worldwide milk surplus, making milk everywhere less valuable. The surplus is caused by farmers maximizing production through better technology, feed and care of the animals, while there is less demand.

“Each animal is giving more every year because of genetics, better feeding, better care,” Peter said. “All those things have improved.”

They can buy “sexed semen,” which determines sex, to inseminate their cows, leading to 90-percent females being born, leading to more milk-producing heifer cows.

Even the European Union (EU) affects the daily lives of farmers here. The EU lifted production restrictions making milk everywhere less valuable.

The Juengels’ farm produces 11,000 pounds of milk each day, which is a suppressed amount. They’ve decreased production, and Peter believes that if everyone dropped 3 or 4 percent, the surplus would end.

“That’s 3 to 4 percent of milk you have to find a home for. No one really wants it, so it lowers the price for everything,” Peter said.

A problem with price

While Michigan dairy farmers are receiving about $14.50 per 100 pounds of milk, store prices list milk at between $2.50 to $3.99 per gallon.

Ken Nobis is president of the Michigan Milk Producers Association, which is a co-op that markets Michigan milk, and is a dairy farmer himself in St. Johns. He said there is a total disconnect between what farmers receive for the fluid milk they sell to processors and what retailers decide to charge.

Milk producers sell their milk to a processor, who then sells it in its final product to a retailer, who sets the final price.

Peter said that Michigan farmers get $2 less per 100 pounds compared to other Great Lakes states, adding up to $85,000 less in revenue each year.

When to sell

Ernie Birchmeier is a Michigan Farm Bureau livestock dairy specialist working in Lansing. He works on behalf of agricultural industry.

“Somebody’s out there producing that food, and it’s important that that food stays profitable so they can continue to produce it,” he said. “The food doesn’t just show up on the grocery store shelf without somebody producing it.”

Peter and Julie know they’ll sell— their children aren’t interested in the family business, but they’d rather sell when it’s profitable.

While they struggle and work most days of the week with a small, but hard working, crew, Julie said she loves the beautiful way of life. “I don’t think I’d want to do anything else,” she said.

For a cow to produce milk, it must have a home for. No one really wants it, so it lowers the price for everything,” Peter said.
Suicide among teens and young adults tripled since 1940s

Local middle school counselor says level of anxiety has soared among students

By Hannah Ball
hball@tctimes.com; 810-433-6792

At only 15 years old, one Fenton freshman has already lost two of her close friends to suicide.

Fenway Jones doesn’t know exactly why her friends, age 16 and 15, decided to take their own lives, but she wants to help prevent it from happening to other people.

“I am planning a Dungeons and Dragons charity event where all of the proceeds are going to a suicide prevention charity,” she said. “I lost two friends in the past year to suicide.”

She’s trying to do some good so other people don’t have to feel the grief of losing someone close to them to suicide. The event, called Jasper’s Game Day, named after one of Jones’ friends who died from suicide, will take place April 21 at Ziege Games in Howell. All the proceeds go to the Barb Smith Suicide Resource and Response Network. See sidebar for more information.

Suicide, which claims 4,600 young lives every year in the U.S., is the third leading cause of death among young people aged 10 to 24, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. That amounts to more than 12 suicides a day from young people.

“Suicide among teens and young adults has nearly tripled since the 1940s, according to the CDC,” said Jennifer Tews, Lake Fenton Middle School counselor, said the increased use of technology and social media is a factor.

“Parents/guardians need to keep lines of communication open with their kids as much as possible. Putting personal devices aside and spending quality time with one another may help,” she said.

Youth suicide is on the rise. Suicide among teens and young adults has nearly tripled since the 1940s, according to the CDC.

The number of children and adolescents admitted to children’s hospitals for thoughts of suicide or self-harm more than doubled in the past decade, according to cbsnews.com. The U.S. saw a 5.7-percent increase in emergency room visits for self-inflicted, non-fatal injuries among children and young adults between 2008 to 2015. The most common patients were female tweens (ages 10-12) and young teens, yet boys are more likely to die from suicide than girls.

Jennifer Tews, Lake Fenton Middle School counselor, said the increased use of technology and social media is a factor.

“I think the lack of personal communication and disconnect people have with one another can make them feel alone and isolated. It has also become easier for people to be cyber bullied making them feel powerless,” she said.

Teens who spend more time on their phone are 70 percent more likely to have suicidal thoughts or actions compared to those who used their phone one hour per day, according to a report published in Clinical Psychological Science.

Tews said middle school students are more stressed compared to middle school students decades ago.

“I think the level of anxiety has soared among middle school students. The use of social media, acceptance, how many likes their posts get, and constant comparing their life with what others are posting. It is not the healthiest environment for our students,” she said.

Tews recommends that parents talk more with their children.

“Parents/guardians need to keep lines of communication open with their kids as much as possible. Putting personal devices aside and spending quality time with one another may help,” she said.

Dungeons and Dragons charity event

At Jasper’s Game Day, on April 21, people can buy in to play the games. At 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Dudgeon Master Seminar costs $40. From 3 to 7 p.m., people can attend a writing seminar for $40, and from 8 to 11 p.m., there will be 12 tables at play, which is $15 per person. Participants can also win door prizes, giveaways and silent auctions. More information can be found at ziegegames.com.

Here’s help in finding a career that will put your education to best use

By Vera Hogan
vhogan@tctimes.com; 810-433-6823

When you walk into a business wearing flip flops and shorts, and yell from the front door, “Hey, are you guys hiring?” the employees there know instantly that you’re not looking for a job, you’re looking for a name and address to put on your Unemployment Insurance form. With college graduations coming up soon, there are going to be many college grads eager to put their newly acquired degrees to good use.

To give yourself an edge in the job market, the following are some tips from careerbuilder.com to nailing that interview, and ultimately the job.

Speak the truth

It should go without saying that lying during an interview is a huge mistake. Yet, candidates still do it, and when they get caught, it’s enough for 66 percent of hiring managers to immediately remove them from consideration.

Turn off your cell phone

One of the fastest ways to lose favor and ruin a job interview is to answer a call or text in the middle of it, according to 64 percent of hiring managers surveyed. Checking your phone during an interview sends the message that you don’t take the interview seriously and shows a lack of respect for your interviewer and his or her time. Take temptation out of the way by turning your phone off or text in the middle of it, and remember your manners and show them that you appreciate their time with a simple but genuine “thank you.”

Don’t be arrogant

Appearing arrogant or entitled is an instant disqualifier for 59 percent of hiring managers. While you should be ready and able to discuss your professional accomplishments and what makes you stand out, there’s a fine line between boasting and bragging. Remember that no one owes you a job, no matter how well qualified you think you are. Remember your manners and show them that you appreciate their time with a simple but genuine “thank you.”

Dress for success

Wearing clothes that are too tight or too loose, too dressy or too casual, or Wearing clothes that are too tight or too loose, too dressy or too casual, or wearing brands and logos in professional settings is a bad sign, according to 49 percent of hiring managers.

Smile

Failing to smile is a major concern among 39 percent of hiring managers. Aside from giving off the impression that you’re cold or standoffish, not smiling also tells hiring managers that you’d rather be anywhere else. Who wants to hire someone who doesn’t want to be there?

Keep your hands to yourself and sit still

Aside from giving off the impression that you’re cold or standoffish, not smiling also tells hiring managers that you’d rather be anywhere else. Who wants to hire someone who doesn’t want to be there?

Keep your hands to yourself and sit still

One-third of hiring managers have witnessed a candidate playing with something on the table during the interview. Not only is it completely juvenile behavior, it shows a complete lack of interest in the interview and disrespect for the interviewers. As a result of this behavior, 49 percent of hiring managers are completely turned off by a candidate who appears to have a lack of accountability.

You accuse your interviewer of playing Fashion police instead of interviewing you about your skills, remember why they even care about your appearance. They’re evaluating your judgment and how you’d appear to customers. Do you show you can fit in with company culture? Are you there to bring professionalism to the organization? Dress the part.

Take responsibility for your actions

According to careerbuilder.com, near half of hiring managers are completely turned off by a candidate who appears to have a lack of accountability. Oftentimes, interviewers ask about difficulties you’ve encountered in the workplace — from a conflict with a co-worker to making a mistake on the job — in order to assess your ability to overcome challenges and learn from them. But if your answers involve placing blame on others without taking any ownership for your own actions, it can be perceived as a lack of maturity and self-awareness, as well as an inability to work well with others.

Make eye contact

Two-thirds of hiring managers say that failing to make eye contact is one of the biggest body language mistakes job candidates make. This could be because not looking someone in the eye can appear as if you’re trying to hide something and are therefore untrustworthy.

10 signs you rocked your interview

How you look, and what you say and do, at a job interview can make the difference between being sent on your way or starting a new career.
FINDING A CAREER

the manager’s time. Is there some place more important you have to be? This is the message you send hiring managers when you fidget too much in your seat.

Arms down
Did the interviewer say something to offend you? Is someone forcing you to be there? Are you pouting because someone asked you a tough question? These are the messages you might be sending with your arms crossed over your chest. About 32 percent of hiring managers find this gesture off-putting.

Nailed it!
According to careerbuilder.com, here are 10 signs you rocked your interview:

You got a second interview

Receiving an invitation for a second interview is a sure-fire indicator of success. If the hiring manager wasn’t interested, she would be evasive about when and whether you could expect to hear back.

They asked for references
If the hiring manager asks for a list of references, it means they are seriously considering you and want to make sure she is dealing with a qualified candidate. A company won’t spend the time and money to complete this process if they aren’t interested in hiring you.

You met the team

Being introduced to people who weren’t on your interview schedule — especially if they are higher up in the company — is a great sign. Bonus points if they are a presid- ent or senior executive. Drop-ins like that signal that not only do you and your abilities are already getting around the office and your potential coworkers are interested in you.

You discussed the specifics of leaving your current job
If the hiring manager asks about the amount of time needed for a transition or what non-compete agreements might be in place, you can be sure you’re on their short list. It indicates that the hiring manager is interested in moving forward with an offer and wants to get out ahead of any potential roadblocks that would slow down your departure from your current organization.

Salary was discussed
This is more dependent on the stage of the interview process you’re in, but discussing salary expectations is often a good sign. It indicates that the company is seriously investing in you. So come prepared.

The interview ran long
Hiring managers schedule interviews in between other responsibilities. If they don’t rush you out the door to get to their next candidate or meeting, consider that a positive sign.

You asked a lot of questions
If the interviewer spends as much time answering your questions as he did asking his own, it’s a sign that the tables have turned and instead of wanting you to pursue the role, he is trying to sell you on it. They called you by name
When a hiring manager references you by your name, it signals that she is picturing you joining her organization. By using your name and not a generic “you,” she is attempting to engage you.

The conversation got nonverbal
Nonverbal signals can tell you a lot about a situation. If the interviewer is nodding, smiling and taking scurupulous notes, for example, that shows he’s engaged and interested.

Cultural fit
In today’s job market, it’s not just about a candidate’s ability to do a job. It’s about how well they’ll potentially fit into the company’s cul- ture. The more a hiring manager talks about how you’ll fit into the mold at the company, the better. It means they see you as a good fit.

About 32 percent of hiring managers find this gesture off-putting.
canoes, and paddleboards. Vessels, such as kayaks, are also included.

The Michigan Department of Natural Resources (DNR) estimates that 650,000 paddle sport vessels are registered in Michigan, those vessels are to be registered. If paddle sport vessels are registered in Michigan, those users would not have to pay the fee in other states if they wish to travel and kayak.

What the money would go to

While the commission voted on a fee up to $10, Nickels said he expects the fee to be around $5. The commission aims to disperse the money through grants for local paddle sport organizations. The money would go to the water trails initiative, public access sites, law enforcement, boater safety education, and providing identification for paddle sport vessels to aid in search and recovery attempts.

In talking with paddle sport organizations, Nickels discovered a need for adaptive launch devices that are handicap accessible with hydraulic lifts. Disabled people would be able to get their kayaks and canoes in and out of the water.

“It’s not going to be without controversy, but so far largely the controversy is misunderstandings as to where the money would go,” he said.

Nickels hopes to get legislation passed by the next voting season this coming fall.

Suggestions that could become law

The Michigan State Waterways Commission is a seven-member advisory body responsible for the construction and maintenance of public recreational harbors, channels, docking and launching facilities.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

- Require registration of all rigid-hulled kayaks and paddleboards (over 8 feet in length) at a fee to be determined
- Require that the registration certificate be affixed to the vessel in a prominent location, containing information on the owner’s name, address, telephone number and cell phone, emergency contact, and email address
- Require that personal flotation devices be on the deck or worn while using these crafts, which is already state law
- Not allow new owners to use previous owner’s registration
- Require that out of state paddle craft register the vessel in Michigan or get a seasonal permit, but this excludes vessels registered in other states

Safety concerns

Another concern is safety and law enforcement resources for paddle sport vessels. Nickels said they heard a “dull roar and then a plea for help” from the DNR while the commission voted on a fee up to $10. "We do what we can but we can’t keep an eye on every attempt," he said.

Funding for water safety

Approximately 50 cents from every dollar collected from boat registration fees is divided between three sections: the DNR water safety division and from county sheriffs and municipal marine patrols.

By law, if an individual is out on the water and someone else is in distress, they are required to help if it does not put themselves in danger, and then to alert law enforcement.

“Disproportionately, law enforcement gets called on emergencies for paddle craft, not motorized vessels,” he said. “With no ID on the kayak, they don’t know if it was blown off someone’s dock or their own, or if they’re looking for a person in the water. They don’t know if it’s a vessel recovery or a search and rescue.”

The Legislature is on spring break with no sessions scheduled until April 10. Rather than votes, this report contains some interesting or noteworthy bill introductions.

House Bill 5031: Impose licensure on assisted living facilities for seniors

Introduced by Rep. Abdullah Hammoud (D), to impose licensure on assisted living facilities for seniors, similar to licensure regimes imposed on hospitals, nursing homes and others. Referred to committee, no further action at this time.

SEX ASSAULT

Continued from Front Page of first-degree criminal sexual conduct (CSC) with a victim under the age of 13 and one count of second-degree CSC with a female under the age of 13.

On Wednesday, April 11, a new arrest warrant was issued against him in Genesee County District Court. Sackrider has now been charged with one felony count of third-degree CSC with an incapacitated victim. This alleged incident took place in July 2017, according to court records.

He was arraigned Thursday, April 12 on the new charge. Sackrider has retained defense attorney Michael Manley to represent him. Acash surety bond of $25,000 was ordered and a probable cause conference has been scheduled for April 26 at 8:30 a.m.

On the earlier charges, Genesee County Sheriff’s detectives were alerted Jan. 13 to a CSC complaint involving Sackrider. Detectives interviewed the victim, who alleged she was sexually assaulted by Sackrider several times when she was between the ages of 11 and 16 years old. She told detectives that the alleged assaults took place at Sackrider’s Linden Road home in Fenton Township. The young victim said Sackrider was her mom’s ex-boyfriend.

“Always recycle, reuse or repurpose,” Pheasant said. “It’s hard to do but when you do it makes you feel good. Always have a recycle bin, a compost pile and a garden to get back out what you put in. Besides, who doesn’t love a nice warm ripe tomato.

“I’ve always had my kids help me cook, I only have boys but they were always able to cook and take care of themselves,” Pheasant said.

Pheasant said their family camped and always cooked at the campsite so her kids would learn how to cook while roughing it. “Hunting or fishing and cooking it afterwards is a huge bonus,” she said.

Pheasant said it is important for parents always to set a good example by getting up and going to work every day yourself. When it comes to finances, she said she teaches her kids what her mom taught her. “Always pay $50 to $100 extra on your mortgage every month toward your principle,” she said.

Pheasant said she has always taught her kids to stick up for the underdog or whoever was being picked on at school. “I always told them the way you act now in high school is the way your classmates are going to remember you when you get older no matter how much you change or how much you say ‘sorry.’ They’re only going to remember the good or the bad come reunion time. How do you want to be remembered,” she said.

Heather Gundry of Fenton said her children have learned life skills along the way as members of the family. They have learned some cooking skills, and banking skills by managing their own checking accounts, and once they turned 16, paying for things on their own with money they’ve earned from part-time jobs. They also learned to do their own laundry.

“They may not be able to boil water but they will reach out to homeless to help in a heartbeat,” she said.

Joe Ludwig, former battalion chief for the Argentine Township Fire Department, who currently works at the General Motors Proving Grounds, has four kids, ranging in age from 34 to 14.

“As a skilled trades mechanic at the GM Milford Proving Ground, I have taught my children the basics of automotive repair and maintenance.” Ludwig said. “It is important to simply know how to change a flat tire and your oil, especially for girls, of which I have three.”

Rob Harris of Fenton said, “After dinner, each of our three girls are assigned two jobs to do before they can get dessert or use their tablets. We have a spinning dial, which we use to rotate the assignments. When the girls know there is a reward to be had soon after their chores, they helps (not guarantees) their cooperation.”

Will Stiverson of Fenton is a single dad. He said, “One of the things that I feel all people need is hope. One way I have been able to teach Logan that is by going to church and praying as often as possible.

“He helps sweep, take out garbage, and rinses the dishes off before putting them in the dishwasher,” Stiverson said. “Those seem like bland things but he really knows how to clean his room well when I ask him. I normally don’t have to tell him twice when he puts his mind to it.”

GOLF SEASON

Leagues are already organized and planning to start play next week.

“T’m trying to be upbeat about the weather,” said Chris White, owner of Fenton Farms Golf Club and Driving Range in Fenton Township. “In the 17 years I’ve owned the course, this is the first year that the golf season has begun on the calendar, without any active play.”

He’s hoping that will all change next week, when golf leagues officially start Wednesday, April 18, if the weather cooperates.

“We have very robust league play,” White said. “Whether they’ll start next week or not will depend on if the course will be able to handle golf carts without ruining the course, because of the weather. At least 80 percent of our golfers use carts.”

Fenton Farms Golf Club boasts a brand new golf cart fleet, plus the added beauty of 1,500 new tulips dotting the landscape. “The course has never looked better. Now we just need Mother Nature to cooperate,” White said.

Most golf course owners and managers see this delay in warm, sunny spring weather as an opportunity because of pent-up demand. That’s the word from Jason Raney, general manager at Coyote Preserve Golf Course in Fenton Township. “Once the weather breaks, it’s going to break for the season,” Raney said.

Coyote Preserve has been open periodically since the end of March, but play hasn’t been consistent because of the weather. “Last year at about this time, we had to close for snow,” Raney said. “Sometimes we forget. We’re not too many days behind where we were last year at this time.”

Raney said Coyote Preserve Golf Course is in great shape. “We’ve already mowed the greens twice and rolled them, so we’re just waiting for them to green up,” he said.

Leagues are already filled to capacity. “If we do get any openings, it will be this time of year,” Raney said. “We do have a waiting list.”

Hartland Glen Golf Course opened for its first official day Thursday, April 12. “This is a lot later than usual,” Scherff said. “This is one of the latest dates I remember, and I’ve been here 20 years. We did open for three days in March, but we couldn’t stay open because of the weather.”

As a 36-hole golf course, Hartland Glen is in a unique position for league play. “We are actually a destination for leagues,” Scherff said. “We’ve got more than 600 league golfers who can play a double rotation on our four nine-hole courses.”

While this golf season has gotten off to a slow start, at least one local golfer has proven his dedication to the sport.

Scott Grossmeyer, 61, has hit the links at least once a month — even during the winter — at Tyrone Hills Golf Course in Tyrone Township.

He’d catch a sunny 40-degree day in January, February and March and walk the course, enjoying a respite from winter. The funny thing is, he was never the only one out there golfing.

“I’d post pictures on Facebook every time because I wanted to encourage others to get out there and play,” Grossmeyer said. He’s looking forward to getting out there twice a week, beginning with league play next week.

Baylis era ending after 13 successful Holly basketball seasons

By David Troppens
dtroppens@tctimes.com; 810-433-6789

The Lance Baylis era didn’t start when the Holly varsity boys basketball coach accepted the position about 13 years ago.

Instead it started one day when he was house hunting.

“When I bought the house in Holly, I didn’t even know what school district we were in,” Baylis said. “I got lucky to move into a community like Holly who has been so appreciative and supportive.”

That move eventually sparked Baylis toward serving as the founder and youth director of Holly Hoops and the Broncho Basketball League. He became Holly’s varsity head coach in July 2005. Since then, he’s spent 13 seasons being the face of the Holly boys basketball program, while also being a teacher of life to every athlete that was part of the Holly boys basketball program.

While Baylis’ love for Holly and his relationship with the program may never end, something changed Tuesday when he resigned the varsity boys basketball position during a meeting with Holly Athletic Director Deb Vankuiken.

“Deb was pulling out the schedule and I said, ‘Hold on there for a second. I’m going to tell you something’ and it was like she saw a ghost. We spent two hours talking and she gave me a big hug. This was perfect timing for me. The program is in great shape and I’m thankful and so proud of the program we build over the last 13 years. … I’m not sad right now. I’m very happy. I gave my heart, soul, blood, sweat, tears and my intensity every single day for 365 days for 13 years, and that’s why I have such a satisfying feeling right now.”

Lake Fenton, Holly brave cold weather; Devils win 4-1

By David Troppens
dtroppens@tctimes.com;

On a day that a lot of Flint area baseball teams cancelled scheduled games, the Lake Fenton Blue Devils and the Holly Bronchos proved weather wasn’t going to keep them from opening their season on Monday.

The squads ended up doing just that as the Bronchos captured a 6-1 home victory against the Blue Devils.

Holly scored three runs in the first inning and never trailed. They led by as many as 6-0, before Lake Fenton scored a single run in the sixth inning.

But probably more important than the actual results for both teams was just getting the season started. Holly varsity baseball coach Benny Jackson was pleased with his team’s performance.

“As far as last night, I was very happy,” Jackson said. “We played a nice, complete game.”

Lake Fenton Blue Devils win 4-1

Lake Fenton — It was a game both teams could back look at and wonder what if.

Both teams had chances to break a 1-1 deadlock, but neither did, meaning area rivals Lake Fenton and Linden had to settle with a 1-1 varsity girls soccer draw on Wednesday.

Both teams scored goals in the opening half. Erica Bretling scored the first one early in the contest on a free kick from about 40 yards out. That goal remained the game’s only tally until Lake Fenton’s freshman Bella Reitano tied it up. The Eagles gave the ball up on a 30-yard shot. From that point, both teams had chances to score again, but never did. Both coaches had mixed thoughts about the contest.

“I thought we did enough to keep ourselves locked in, engaged and gave ourselves a chance to win the game, but we couldn’t find the final thing to score,” Lake Fenton varsity girls soccer coach Spencer Quick said. “Some of it has to do with effort on some areas of the field, and some of it has to do with bad bounces. If we change two to three things I think we could’ve won that game. But if you change two to three things the other way, we could’ve lost that game.

“We are a complete rebuild right now,” Linden varsity girls soccer coach Kevin Fiebertnitz said. “It’s going to be a challenging year. Our back line was supposed to be our strength because we were supposed to have the whole back line coming back. … We just have one of them back and that’s forced our team to take on a great challenge.”

Lake Fenton — It was a battle between two teams that won league titles a season ago.

And when the varsity softball twinbill between Holly and Lake Fenton ended at Lake Fenton High School on Wednesday, both teams came home with a victory.

The Lake Fenton Blue Devils captured the first game 6-4, while the Holly Bronchos won the second 4-2.

Neither squad was particularly thrilled with their performance, but that was understandable considering both teams have spent very little time outdoors.

Tigers, Bronchos hopeful about season; Fenton edges Holly, 2-0

By David Troppens
dtroppens@tctimes.com; 810-433-6789

Team goals are never about wins or losses for the Fenton varsity girls soccer squad.

But if the Tigers satisfy their goals, the wins usually start coming their way.

That was the case Monday when the Tigers hosted the Holly Bronchos for a non-league contest at Fenton High School, when the Tigers captured a 2-0 victory.

“Our goal, as every year, is to treat each other with love and cherish each other’s company for two hours a day, for three months. I am happy to say we are well on our way to fulfilling that goal.” Fenton varsity girls soccer coach Matt Sullivan said. “(The Holly game) was another example of that. We are able to play our hardest, compete against each other for playing time and still have fun doing it. That’s not easy to do, but that attitude comes from your seniors, and we are blessed again this year with an unselﬁsh group who is willing to put the team before themselves.”

“WHY SERVICE YOUR VEHICLE AT VIC CANEVER?”

There was a glass repair person on-site that noticed a chip in my windshield. He was able to repair it while I already had my vehicle in for maintenance. This saved me a second trip or trying to schedule another time to have this work done.

Very nice. Thank you.
